1. Ornaments appendant to the saddle. Caparisons and steeds,

Bases and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights
At joust and tournament. Milt. n.

2. Ornaments; dæds; embellishments; external, superficial, and trifling decoration.

These indeed seem,
But I have that within which pallieth shew;
These but the trappings, and the suits of woe. Shakespeare.

He has fair words, rich trappings, and large promises; but works only for his master. L'Estrange.

The points of honour poets may produce,
Trappings of life, for ornament, not use. Dryden.

Such pageantry be to the people shown;
These boast thy horse's trappings, and thy own. Dryden.

Draw him strictly so,
That all who view the piece may know
He needs no trappings of fictitious fame. Dryden.

In ships decay'd no mariner considers,
Lur'd by the gilded stern and painted sides:
Yet, at a bath, unthinking fools delight
In the gay trappings of a birth-day night. Swift.

TRAPSTICK. n. f. [trap and stick.] A stick with which boys drive a wooden ball.

A foolish swoop between a couple of thick hands legs and two long trapsticks that had no call. Spectator.

TRASII. n. f. [trios, Islandick; drayen, German.]

1. Any thing worthless; dross; dregs.

Lay hands upon these traitors, and their trash. Shakespeare.

Look what a wardrobe here is for thee!
—Let it alone, thou fool, it is but trash. Shakespeare.

Whop steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;

'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands,
But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which nothing enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed. Shakespeare.

More than ten Hollands, or Halls, or Slows,
Of trivial household trash he knows; he knows
When the queen frown'd or fain'd.

The collectors only consider, the greater fame a writer is in possession of, the more trash he may bear to have tacked to him. Swift.

Weak foolish man! will heav'n reward us there?
With the same trash mad mortals wish for here? Pope.

2. A worthless person.

I suspect this trash
To be a party in this injury. Shakespeare.

3. Matter improper for food, frequently eaten by girls in the greenicknels.

To pass; to go; to move.
By th' clock 'tis day;
And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp. Shakespeare.

Time travels in divers paces with divers persons; I tell you who time ambles withal, who time trots withal. Shakespeare.
Thus flying east and west, and north, and south, News travell'd with increase from mouth to mouth. Pope.

3. To make journeys of curiosity.
Nothing tends so much to enlarge the mind as travelling, that is, making a visit to other towns, cities, or countries, beside those in which we were born and educated. Watts.

4. To labour; to toil. This should be rather travail.
If we labour to maintain truth and reason, let not any think that we travel about a matter not useful. Hooker.

5. TRA'VEL. v. a.
1. To pass; to journey over.
Thither to arrive,
I travel this profound, Milton.
2. To force to journey.

There are other privileges granted unto most of the corporations, that they shall not be charged with garrisons, and they shall not be travelled forth within own franchises. Spenser.

TRA'VEL. n. f. [travail, Fr. from the noun.]
1. Journey; act of passing from place to place.

Love had cut him short,
Confin'd within the pincus of his court,
Three miles he went, nor farther could retreat,
He transcended at his country-seat.
Slung sent into the dunce
Memento's brought with all the treasures
Which thy culture travel views. Prior.

2. Journey of curiosity or instruction.
Let him spend his time no more at home,
Which would be great impeachment to his age,
Is having known no travel in his youth. Shakespeare.
Travel in the younger sort is a part of education; in the elder, a part of experience. Bacon.
In my travels I had been near their setting out in the day, and at the place of their landing in the night. Brown.

A man not enlightened by travel or reflection, grows as fond of arbitrary power, to which he hath been used, as of barren countries, in which he has been born and bred. Addison.

3. Labour; toil. This should be travail: as in Daniel.
He wars with a retiring enemy,
With much more travail than with victory. Daniel.

T R A

What think'st thou of our empire now, though earn'd
With travel difficult? Milton.

4. Labour in childbirth. This sense belongs rather to travail.
Thy mother well deserves that short delight,
The nauseous qualms often long months and travel to requite. Dryden.

5. TRAVELS. Account of occurrences and observations of a journey into foreign parts.
A book of his travels hath been honoured with the translation of many languages. Brown.
Histories engage the soul by terrible occurrences, as also voyages, travels, and accounts of countries. Watts.

TRA'VELLER. n. f. [travailleux, Fr. from travail.]
1. One who goes a journey; a wayfarer.

The weary traveller wand'ring that way,
Thereto did often quench his thirsty heat. Spenser.
At the olive route
They drew them then in heaps, most far from foot
Of any traveller. Chapman.
A little ease to these my torments give,
Before I go where all in silence mourn,
From whose dark shores no travellers return. Sandys.

This was a common opinion among the gentiles, that the gods sometimes assumed human shape, and converted upon earth with strangers and travellers. Bentley.
It a poor traveller tells her, that he has neither strength, nor food, nor money left, he never bids him go to the place from whence he came. Lane.

2. One who visits foreign countries.
Farewel, monieur traveller; look you list and wear strange suits, and disable all the benefits of your own country. Shakespeare.
These travellers for cloaths, or for a meal,
At all adventures, any lye will tell. Chapman.
The traveller into a foreign country knows more by the eye, than he that stayeth at home can by relation of the traveller. Bacon.
They are travellers newly arrived in a strange country, we should therefore not mislead them. Locke.

TRA'VELTAINED. adj. [travel and tainted.]

thought to be the cock's sperm. Derham.

TREASON. n. f. [trahison, Fr.] An offence committed against the dignity and majesty of the commonwealth.

It is divided into high treason and petit treason.
High treason is an offence against the security of the commonwealth, or of the king's majesty, whether by imagination, word, or deed; as to compass or imagine treason, or the death of the prince, or the queen consort, or his son and heir-apparent; or to do violence to the king's wife, or his eldest daughter unmarried, or his eldest son's wife; or levy war against the king in his realm, or to adhere to his enemies by aiding them, or to counterfeit the king's great seal, privy seal, or money; or knowingly to bring false money into this realm counterfeited like the money of England, and to utter the same; or to kill the king's chancellor, treasurer, justice of the one bench or of the other; justices in eyre, justices of assize, justices of oyer and terminer, when in their place and doing their duty; or forging the king's seal manual, or privy signet; or diminishing or impairing the current money; and in such treason, a man forfeits his lands and goods to the king; and it is called treason paramount. Petit treason is when a servant kills his master, a wife her husband, a clerk secular or religious kills his prelate; this treason gives forfeiture to every lord within his own fee: both treasons are capital. Cowell.

He made the overture of thy treasons to us. Shakespeare.

Mau disobeying,
Disloyal breaks his fealty, and sins
Against the high supremacy of heaven:
To expiate his treason hath nought left. Milton.

This being a treason against God, by a con-

Athaliah cried, Treason, treason. 2 Kings.

TREASONABLE. adj. [from treason.]
TREASONOUS. adj. Having the nature or guilt of treason. Treasonous is out of use.

Him by proofs as clear as founts in July
I know to be corrupt and treasonous. Shakespeare.

Against th' undivulgd pretence I fight
Of treasonous malice. Shakespeare.

imagination of plots and treasonable practices. Clarendon.

Were it a draught for Juno when she banquet
I would not taste thy treasonous offer. Milton.

A credit to run ten millions in debt without per-bmentary security is dangerous, illegal, and highly treasonable. Blackstone.

TREASURE. n. f. [trezor, Fr. thesaurus, Lat.] Wealth hoarded; riches accumulated.

An inventory, importing
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich funds. Shakespeare.

He used his laws as well for collecting of treas- ure, as for correcting of sinners. Bacon.

Gold is treasure as well as silver, because both crying, and never sinking much in value. Locke.

To TREASURE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To hoard; to reposit; to lay up.

After thy har'ous and impudent heart, thou treasurest up unto thyself wealth against the day of wrath. Romans.

Practical principles are treasured up in man's mind, that, like the candle of the Lord in heart of every man, discovers what he is to do and what to avoid. Saunders.

No; my remembrance treasures home that
And holds not things like thee; I scorn thy book-ship. Keats.

Some thought it mounted to the lunar sphere,
Since all things lost on earth are treasured there. Pope.

TREASUREHOUSE. n. f. [treasure and house.] Place where hoarded riches are kept.

Let there be any grief or disease incident to the soul of man, for which there is not in this treasure- house a present comfortable remedy to be found. Hobbes.

Thou sinner treasurest house,
Tell me once more, what tale dost thou bear? Shakespeare.

Gather together into your spirit, and as treasures loose the memory, not only all the pleasures of God, but also the former senses of the divine fours. Locke.

TREASURER. n. f. [from treasure; trah- er, Fr.] One who has care of money;
one who has charge of treasure.

This is my treasurer, let him speak
That I have reserv'd nothing. Shakespeare.

Before the invention of laws, private avarices in supreme rulers made their own interests their treasures and hangmen, weighing in the balance good and evil. Blackstone.

TREASURERSHIP. n. f. [from treasurer.]
Office or dignity of treasurer.

TRE

No pretence a hasty fellow, who was a sutor for the treasure ship, before the most worthy.
Hakewill.

TREASURY. n. f. [from treasure; trésorerie, French.]

A place in which riches are accumulated.

And yet I know not how conceit may rob
The treasury of life, when life itself
Yields to the theft. Shakespeare.

Ulysses' goods. A very treasury
Of brass, and gold, and steel of curious frame.
Chapman.

He had a purpose to furnish a fair case in that university with choice collections from all parts, like that famous treasury of knowledge at Oxford.
Watton.

The state of the treasury the king best knows.
Temple.

Physicians, by treasuries of just observations, grow to skill in the heart of healing.

It is used by Shakespeare for treasure.

And make his chronicle as rich with prize,
As is the oazy bottom of the sea
With sunken wreck and sumless treasuries.
Shakespeare.

Thy sumptuous buildings
Have cost a mass of public treasury. Shakespeare.

To TREAT. v. a. [traiter, French; tracto,
Latin.]

To treat the peace, a hundred senators Shall be commissioned. Dryden.

2. [tracto, Lat.] To discourse on.

3. To use in any manner, good or bad.
He treated his prisoner with great harshness.
Spectator.

Since living virtue is with envy cur'd,
And the best men are treated like the worst;
Do thou, just goddess, call our merits forth,
And give each deed th' exact, intrinsic worth. Pope.

4. To handle; to manage; to carry on.

Zeno and Polygnus treated their subjects in their pictures, as Homer did in his poetry. Dryden.

5. To entertain without expense to the guest.

To TREAT. v. n. [traiter, Fr. trahian, Saxon.]

It we do not please, at least we treat. Prior.

TREAT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An entertainment given.

This is the ceremony of my fate:
A parting treat, and I'm to die in state. Dryden.
He pretends a great concern for his country, and insight into matters: now such professions, when recommended by a treat, dispose an audience to hear reason. Collier.

What tender maid but must a victim fall
For one man's treat, but for another's ball? Pope.

2. Something given at an entertainment.

Dry figs and grapes, and wrinkled dates were set
In cassiers to enlarge the little treat. Dryden.

The king of gods revolving in his mind
Iycan's guilt and his inhuman treat. Dryden.

TREATABLE. adj. [traitable, Fr.] Moderate; not violent.

A virtuous mind should rather wish to depart this world with a kind of treatable dissolution, than be suddenly cut off in a moment, rather to be taken than snatched away. Hooker.

The heats or the colds of seasons are less treatable than with us. Temple.

VOL. II.

TRE

TREATISE. n. f. [tractatus, Latin.] Discourse; written tractate.

The time has been, my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir
As life were in't. Shakespeare.

Besides the rules given in this treatise to make a perfect judgment of good pictures, there is required a long conversation with the best pieces. Dryden.

TREATMENT. n. f. [traitement, French.]

Usage; manner of using, good or bad.

Scarce an humour or character which they have not used; all comes as fitted to us; and were they to entertain this age, they could not now make such plentiful treatment. Dryden.

Accept such treatment as a swain affords. Pope.

TREATY. n. f. [traité, French.]

1. Negotiation; act of treating.

She began a treaty to procure,
And stablsh terms betwix both their requests. Spenser.

He cast by treaty and by trains

Her to persuade. Spenser.

2. A compact of accommodation relating to public affairs.

A peace was concluded, being rather a bargain than a treaty. Bacon.

Echion then

Lots fall the guiltless weapon from his hand,
And with the rest a peaceful treaty makes. Add.

3. [for entreaty.] Supplication; petition;
solicitation.

I must

To the young man feed humble treasures, dog,
And palter in the shift of lowliness. Shakespeare.

TREBLE. adj. [triple, French; triplex,
triplex, Latin.]

1. Threefold; triple.

Some I see,

That twofold balls and treble sceptres carry. Shaksp.

Who can

His head's huge doors unlock, whose jaws with great
And dreadful teeth in treble ranks are set? Sandys.

All his wishes serv'd but to bring forth
Infinite goodness, grace, and mercy shown
On man by him reduc'd; but on himself
Treble confusion, wrath, and vengeance pour'd. Milton.

A lofty tow'r, and strong on ev'ry side

With treble walls. Dryden.

The pious Trojan then his jav'lin sent,
The shield gave way; through treble plates it went
Of solid brass. Dryden.

2. Sharp of sound. A musical term.

The sharper or quicker percussive of air causeth
the more treble sound, and the lower or heavier the base sound. Bacon.

To TREBLE. v. a. [from the adjective;

triplico, Latin; triplex, French.] To multiply by three; to make thrice as much.

She conceiv'd, and trebling the due time,
Brought forth this monstrous mass. Spenser.

I would not be ambitious in my wish,
To wish myself much better; yet for you,
I would be trebled twenty times myself.

A thousand times more fair. Shakespeare.

Aquarius shines with feebler rays,
Four years he trebles, and doubles six score days. Croch.

To TREBLE. v. n. To become threefold.

Whoever annually runs out, as the debt doubles and trebles upon him, so doth his inability to pay it. Swift.

TREBLE. n. f. A sharp sound.

The treble cutteth the air so sharp, as it returneth too swift to make the sound equal; and thus forca mean or tenor is the sweetest. Bacon.

The lute still trembles underneath thy nail.

At thy well-sharpen'd thumb, it on those to shone,
The trebles squeak for fear, the bales roar. Dryden.

TREBLENESS. n. f. [from treble.] The state of being treble.

The just proportion of the air percussive towards the baseness or trebleness of tones, is a great secret in sounds. Bacon.

TRE

TREBLE. adv. [from treble.] Thrice told;
in threefold number or quantity.

His jav'lin sent,
The shield gave way; through treble plates it went
Of solid brass, of linen treble roll'd. Dryden.

of the federal species, it is in some doubly and

TREE. n. f. [tre, Islandick; tree, Danish.]

1. A large vegetable, rising with one woody stem to a considerable height.

Trees and shrubs, of our native growth in England, are distinguished by Ray. 1. Such as have their flowers disjointed and remote from the fruit; and these are, 1. Nuciferous ones; as, the walnut tree, the hazel nut tree, the beech, the chestnut, and the common oak 2. Comiferous ones; of this kind are the Scotch fir, male and female; the pine, the common alder tree, and the larch tree. 3. Haeciferous; as, the juniper and yew trees. 4. Lanigeferous ones; as, the black, white, and trembling poplar, willows, and others of all kinds. 5. Such as bear their seeds, having an imperfect flower, fleshy membranes, as, the harte bean. 6. Such as have their fruits and flowers contiguous; of these some are pomiferous; as, apples and pears; and some haciferous; as, the torb or tervie tree, the white or hawthorn, the wild rose, sweet briar, currants, the great bilberry bush, honey-suckle, &c. 7. Pruniferous ones, whose fruits are pretty large and soft, with a stone in the middle; as, the black thorn or sloe tree, the black and white bullace tree, the black cherry, &c.

8. Hae-ciferous ones; as, the straw berry tree in the west the gaul or sweet willow, common heath, broom, dyers wood, furze or gorse, the lingo tree, &c.

Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish,
A locked mountain, or blue promontory
With trees upon't, that nod unto the world,
And mock our eyes with air. Shakespeare.

Who can bid the tree unfix his earth-bound root,
Shakspere.

It is pleasant to look upon a tree in summer covered with green leaves, decked with blossoms, or laden with fruit, and eating a pleasant shade; but to consider how this tree sprung from a little seed, how nature shaped and fed it till it came to this greatness, is a more rational pleasure. Burnet.

Trees shoot up in one great stem, and at a good distance from the earth spread into branches; thus goleberries are shrubs, and oaks are trees. Locke.

2. Any thing branched out.

Vain are their hopes who fancy to inherit,
By trees of pedigree, or time or birth;
Though plodding heralds through each branch way trace Shakspere.

Old captains and delators of their race. Dryden.

TREE germander. n. f. A plant,

Well run greenhood, got between
Under the sand-bug he was seen;
Lowing low like a forlorn green,
He knows his tackle and his team. Ben Jonson.

TREEN. adj. Wooden; made of wood.

Obsolete.

Sir Thomas Rookby being controlled for fast suffering himself to be served in treen cups, answered, these homely cups pay truly for that they contain. I had rather drink out of treen, and pay gold and silver, than drink out of gold and silver, and make wooden payments. Camden.

plant. Müller.

THE

Hope, by the ancients, was drawn in the form of a sweet and beautiful child standing upon tipsies, and a trefoil or three-leaved grass in her hand.

Some sow trefoil or rye-grass with their clover.

TREILLAGE. n. f. [French.] A contexture of pales to support espalliers, making a distinct inclosure of any part of a garden.

There are so many kinds of gardening as of poetry: makers of flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonnetiers; contrivers of bowers, grottos, treillages, and cascades, are romance writers. Spectator.
TRELLIS. n. f. [French.] A structure of iron, wood, or other, the parts crossing each other like a lattice.

Tretoux.
TO TREMBLE. v. n. [trembler, French; trempe, Latin.]

1. To shake as with fear or cold; to shiver; to quake; to shudder.

My compassionate heart
Will not permit my eyes once to behold
The thing, whereat it trembles by surmise? Shakspeare.
God's name

And power thou tremblest not. Shakspeare.
Shew your slaves how choleric you are,
And make your bondsmen tremble. Shakspeare.

When he heard the king, he fell into such a trembling that he could hardly speak. Clarendon.
Frighted Turnus trembled as he spoke. Dryden.

He shook the sacred honours of his head,
With terror trembled heavy's bubbling hill,
And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distil. Dryden.

Ye pow'rs, revenge your violated altars,
That they who with unballo'd hands approach
May tremble. Rome.

2. To quiver; to totter.

Sinai's grey top shall tremble. Milton.
We cannot imagine a mass of water to have stood upon the middle of the earth like one great drop, or a trembling jelly, and all the places about it dry. Burnet.

3. To quaver; to shake as a sound.

Winds make a noise unequally, and sometimes, when vehement, tremble at the height of their blast. Bacon.

TREMBLINGLY. adv. [from trembling.] So as to shake or quiver.

Tremblingly the flood,
And on the sudden dropt. Shakspeare.
Say, what the use, were finer optics giv'n,
To inspect a mote, not comprehend the heav'n:
Or touch, if tremblingly alive all o'er,
To smart and agonize at every pore? Pope.

TREMENDOUS. adj. [tremendus, Latin.] Dreadful; horrible; astonishingly terrible.

There stands an altar where the priest celebrates
Some mysteries sacred and tremendous. Trotter.
In that portal should the chief appear,
Each hand tremendous with a brazen spear. Pope.

TREMOUR. n. f. [tremor, Latin.]

1. The state of trembling.

He fell into an universal tremour of all his joints, that when going his legs trembled under him. Hurvey.
By its syrtick and stimulating quality it affects the nerves, occasioning tremours. Arbutnot.

2. Quivering or vibratory motion.

These stars do not twinkle when viewed through telescopes which have large apertures: for the rays
of light which pass through divers parts of the aperture tremble each of them apart, and by means of their various, and sometimes contrary tremours, fall at one and the same time upon different points in the bottom of the eye. Newton.

1. Trembling; fearful.

The tender tremulous christian is easily distracted and amazed by them. Decay of Piety.

2. Quivering; vibratory.

He owned to have some kind of little discomposure in the choice of things perfectly indifferent;

TRE

for where there was nothing to determine him, the balance by hanging even became tremulous. Phil.
Breath vocalized, that is, vibrated or undulated,
impresses a swift tremulous motion in the lips, tongue, or palate, which breath passing smooth
does not. Holder.

As thus th' effulgence tremulous I drink,
The lambent lightnings shoot across the sky. Thomf.

TREMULOUSNESS. n. f. [from tremulous.]

The state of quivering.

TREN. n. f. A fish spear.

TO TRENCH. v. a. [trancher, Fr.]

1. To cut.

Safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trenched gaffs on his head. Shakspeare.

This weak impress of love is as a signre
Trench'd in ice, which with an hour's heat
Dissolves to water, and doth lose his form. Shakspeare.

2. To cut or dig into pits or ditches.

Trench the ground, and make it ready for the spring.  Evelyn.
First draw thy saulchion, and on ev'ry side
Trench the black earth a culit long and wide. Pope.

The trenching plough or conter is useful in pat-ture-ground, to cut out the sides of trenches or ditches. Mortimer.

3. To fortify by earth thrown up.

Pioneers with spades and pickax arm'd,
Fore-run the royal camp to trench a field. Milton.

TRENCH. n. f. [tranche, Fr.]

1. A pit or ditch.

On that count' build,
And with a trench enclose the fruitful field. Dryd.

When you have got your water up to the highest part of the land, make a small trench to carry some of the water in, keeping it always upon a level. Mortimer.

2. Earth thrown up to defend soldiers in their approach to a town, or to guard a camp.

The citizens of Corioli have issued forth
And given to Lartius and to Marcus battle:
I saw our party to the trenches driven,
And then I came away. Shakspeare.

William carries on the trench,
Till both the town and castle yield. Prior.

TRENCHANT. adj. [trenchant, Fr.] Cutting; sharp.

He fiercely took his trenchant blade in hand,
With which he struck so furious and so fell,
That nothing seem'd the puillance could withstand. Spenser.

Against a vanquish'd foe, their swords
Were sharp and trenchant, not their words. Hudibras.

TRENCHER. n. f. [from trench; trenchoir,
French.]

1. A piece of wood on which meat is cut at table.

No more
I'll scrape trencher, nor wash dish. Shakspeare.

My estate deserves an heir more rais'd
Than one which holds a trencher. Shakspeare.

When we find our dogs, we set the dish or trencher on the ground. More.

Their homely fare dispatch'd; the hungry band
Invade their trenchers' next, and soon devour. Dryden.

Many a child may have the idea of a square trencher, or round plate, before he has any idea of infinity. Locke.

2. The table.

How often hast thou,
Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board
When I have feasted! Shakspeare.

3. Food; pleasures of the table.

It could be no ordinary declension of nature that could bring some men, after an ingenious education, to place their summum bonum upon their trenchers, and their utmost felicity in wine. South.

TRENCHERLY. n. f. [trencher and ly.]

One that haunts tables; a parasite.

He found all people came to him promiscuously, and he tried which of them were friends, and which only trencherlies and spongers. L'Estrange.

TRE

TRENCHERMAN. n. f. [trencher and man.]

1. A cook. Obsolete.

Palladius assured him, that he had already been more fed to his liking than he could be by the fullest trenchermen of Media. Sidney.

2. A feeder; an eater.

You had muddy victuals, and he hath help to eat it: he's a very valiant trencher man; he hath an excellent stomach. Shakspeare.

TRENCHERMATE. n. f. [trencher and mate.]

A table companion; a parasite.

Because that judicious learning of the ancient sages doth not in this case serve the turn, these trenchermates frame to themselves a way more pleasant; a new method they have of turning things that are serious into wockery, an art of cotradiction by way of scorn. Hooker.

TO TREND. v. n. To tend; to lie in any particular direction. It means a corruption of tend.

The scouts to several parts divide their way,
To learn the natives names, their towns, explore
The customs and trendings of the crooked shore. Dryden.

TRENDLE. n. f. [tzenbel, Saxon.] Any thing turned round. Now improperly written trundle.

TRENTAIS. n. f. [treinte, Fr.]

Trentais or trigintals were a number of maffs, to the tale of thirty, laid on the same account,
according to a certain order instituted by St.
Gregory. Aylmer.

TREPAN. n. f. [trepan, Fr.]

1. An instrument by which chirurgeons cut out round pieces of the skull.

2. A snare; a stratagem by which any one is ensnared. [Of this signification
Skinner assigns for the reason, that some English ships in queen Elizabeth's reign being invited, with great show of friendship, into Trapani, a part of Sicily, were there detained.]

But what a thoughtless animal is man,
How very active in his own trepan! Roscommon.

Can there be any thing of friendship in bars,
hooks, and *trepan*s? Scott.

During the commotion of the blood and spirit in which passion consists, whatsoever is offered the imagination in favour of it, tends only to necessitate the reason: it is indeed a real trepan upon it, feeding it with colours and appearances instead of arguments. South.

TO TREPAN. v. a. [from the noun; tre-paner, French.]

1. To perforate with the trepan.

A putrid matter flowed forth her nostrils, of the same smell with that in trepanning the bone. Wijeman.

Few recovered of those that were trepanned. Arbutnot.

2. To catch; to ensnare.

They trepan'd the state, and fac'd it down
With plots and projects of our own. Hudibras.

Those are but trepanned who are called to govern, being invested with authority but bereav'd of power, which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magnificent way of being ridiculous. South.

TREPINE. n. f. A small trepan; a smaller instrument of perforation managed by one hand.

I shew'd a trepan and trepine, and gave them liberty to try both upon a skull. Wijeman.

TREPIDATION. n. f. [trepidatio, Lat.]

1. The state of trembling, or quivering.

The bow tortures the string continually, and holdeth it in a continual trepidation. Ramus.

All objects of the senses which are very offensive, cause the spirits to retire; upon which the parts in some degree, are deslute; and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror. Ramus.

Moving of th' earth brings harms and tears,
Men reckon what it did and meant;

But regulation of the spheres,
though greater far, is innocent.
They pass the planets for'n, and pass the fix'd, and that crystalline sphere whose balance weighs the regulation talk'd, and that first mov'd.

Donne.

Milton.

State of terror.

Because the whole kingdom stood in a zealous regulation of the absence of such a prince, I have seen the more desirous to research the several passages of the journey.

Wotton.

His first action of note was in the battle of Le-santo; where the success of that great day, in such regulation of the state, made every man meritorious.

Wotton.

Hurry; confused haste.

TRESPASS, v. n. [trespasser, Fr.]

To transgress; to offend.

If they shall confess their trespass which they trespassed against me, I will remember my covenant.

Leiticius.

They not only contradict the general design and particular exprees of the gospel, but trespass against all logic.

Norris.

To enter unlawfully on another's ground.

Their morals and economy

Most perfectly they made agree:

Each virtue kept its proper bound,

Nor trespass'd on the other's ground.

Prior.

TRESPASS, n. f. [trespas, French.]

1. Transgression; offence.

Your purpose'd low correction

Is such, as basest and the meanest wretches

For pilfering, and most common trespass,

Are punish'd with.

Shakespeare.

Will God incense his ire

For such a petty trespass?

Milton.

2. Unlawful entrance on another's ground.

TRESPASSER, n. f. [from trespass.]

1. An offender; a transgressor.

2. One who enters unlawfully on another's ground.

If I come upon another's ground without his licence, or the licence of the law, I am a trespasser, for which the owner may have an action of trespass against me.

Walton.

TRESSED, adj. [from treffe, Fr.] Knotted or curled.

Nor this nor that so much doth make me mourn,

But for the lad, whom long I lov'd so dear,

Now loves a lass that all his love doth scorn,

He plunged in pain his tressed locks doth tear.

Spenser.

TRESSES, n. f. without a singular. [treffe, Fr. treccia, Ital.] A knot or curl of hair.

Hung be the heav'n's with black, yield day to night!

Comets, importing change of times and fates,

Braiidish your crystal resses in the sky! Shakespeare

Her swelling breast

Naked, met his under the flowing gold

Of her loose resses hid.

Milton.

Adam had wove

Of choicest flow'rs a garland to adorn

Her resses, and her rural labours crown.

Milton.

Fair resses man's imperial race ensnare,

And beauty draws us with a single hair.

Pope.

Then cease, bright nymph! to mourn the ravish'd

hair,

Which adds new glory to the shining sphere!

Not all the resses that fair hair can boast

Shall draw such envy as the lock you lost.

Pope.

TRETABLE, n. f. [trebeau, French.]

1. The frame of a table.

2. A moveable form by which any thing is supported.

TRET, n. f. [probably from tritius, Lat.]

An allowance made by merchants to retailers, which is four pounds in every hundred weight, and four pounds for wale or refuse of a commodity.

Bailey.

malmsey.

Shakespeare.

TRIABLE, adj. [from try.]

1. Possible to be experimented; capable of trial.

For the more easy understanding of the experiments triable by our engine, I imbricated that notion, by which all of them will prove explicable.

Boyle.

2. Such as may be judicially examined.

No one should be admitted to a bishop's chancellorship without good knowledge in the civil and canon laws, since divers causes triable in the spiritual court are of weight.

Ayliffe.

TRIAD, n. f. [trias, Lat. triade, Fr.]
Three united.

TRIAL, n. f. [from try.]

1. Test; examination.

With trial fire touch me his finger end;

If he be chaste, the flame will back descend,

And turn him to no pain; but if he start,

It is the sign of a corrupted heart.

Shakespeare.

2. Experiment; act of examining by experience.

I leave him to your gracious acceptance,

Whole trial shall better publish his commendation.

Shakespeare.

Skilful gardeners make trial of the seeds by putting them into water gently boiled; and if good, they will sprout within half an hour.

Bacon.

There is a mixed kind of evidence relating both to the senses and understanding, depending upon our own observation and repeated trials of the effects and events of actions or things, called experience.

Wilkins.

3. Experience; experimental knowledge.

Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourg-ings.

Hebrews.

4. Judicial examination.

Trial is used in law for the examination of all causes, civil or criminal, according to the laws of our realm: the trial is the issue, which is tried upon the indictment, not the indictment itself.

Cowell.

He hath resisted law

And therefore law shall scorn him further trial

Than the severity of public power.

Shakespeare.

A canon of the Jews required, in all suits and judicial trials betwixt rich and poor, that either each should stand, or both should sit.

Kettlerell.

They shall come upon their trial, have all their actions strictly examined.

Nelson.

5. Temptation; test of virtue.

Let our trial, when least sought,

May find us both perhaps far less prepar'd,

The willing I go.

Milton.

No such company as them thou saw'st Intended thee; for trial only brought,

To see how thou couldst judge of fit and meet.

Milton.

Every station is exposed to some trials, either temptations that provoke our appetites, or disquiet our fears.

Rogers.

6. State of being tried.

Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.

—It is to be all made of sighs and tears;

It is to be made all of faith and fervour;

All humbleness, all patience and impatience;

All purity, all trial, all observance.

Shakespeare.

TRIANGLE, n. f. [triangle, Fr. triangulum, Lat.] A figure of three angles.

The three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones.

Locke.

TRIANGULAR, adj. [triangularis, Lat.]

Having three angles.

The frame thereof seem'd partly circular.

And part triangular; O work divine!

These two the first and last proportions are.

Though a round figure be most capacious for the honey, and convenient for the bee; yet did she not chuse that, because there must have been triangular spaces left void.

Ray.

TRINE, n. f. [trihus, Lat. from tres, British; tr and u being labials of pro-nuncious use in the ancient British words: triv from trif, his lands, is supposed by Rowland to be Celtick, and used before the Romans had any thing to do with the British government. This notion will not be much recommended, when it is told, that he derives centuria
from triv, supposing it to be the same with our centur, importing a hundred *triv*s or tribes.]

1. A distinct body of the people as divided by family or fortune, or any other cha-racteristick.

I ha' been writing all this night unto all the tribes
And centuries for their voices, to help Catiline
In his election.

Ben Jonson.

If the heads of the tribes can be taken off, and the misled multitude will see their error, such extent of mercy is honourable.

Bacon.

Who now shall rear you to the sun, or rank
Your tribes, and water from th' ambrosial fount?

Milton.

Teach straggling mountaineers, for publick good,
To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood,
Houses to build.

Tate.

I congratulate my country upon the increase of this happy tribe of men, since, by the present parliament, the race of freeholders is spreading into the remotest corners.

Addison.

2. It is often used in contempt.
Folly and vice are easy to describe.
The common subjects of our scribbling tribe.

Lycammon.

TRIBLET or TRIBULET, n. f. A gold-smith's tool for making rings.

Ainsw.

TRIBULATION, n. f. [tribulation, Fr.]
Persecution; distress; vexation; disturbance of life.

Tribulation being present causeth sorrow, and being imminent breedeth fear.

Hooker.

The just shall dwell,
And, after all their tribulations long,
See golden days fruitful of golden deeds.

Milton.

Death becomes
His final remedy; and after life
T'y'd in sharp tribulation, and refin'd

Milton.

By faith, and faithful works.
Our church taught us to pray, that God, would, not only in all time of our tribulation, but in all time of our wealth, deliver us.

Atterbury.

TRIBUNAL, n. f. [tribunal, Latin and French.]

1. The seat of a judge.

I th' market place, on a tribunal silver'd,

Cleopatra and heretofore in chairs of gold
Were publicly enthron'd.

Shakespeare.

He sees the room
Where the whole nation does for justice come,
Under whose large roof flourishes the gown,
And judges grave on high tribunal town.

Waller.

There is a necessity of standing at his tribunal, who is infinitely wise and just.

Grew.

He, who for our takes stood before an earthly tribunal, might therefore be consulted judge of the whole world.

Nelson.

2. A court of justice.

Summoning meekly to proclaim

Milton.

Thy dread tribunal.

TRIUNST, n. f. [tribun, tribunus, Lat.]

1. An officer of Rome chosen by the people.

These are the tribunes of the people,
The tongues o' th' common mouth: I do despise them.

Shakespeare.

2. The commander of a Roman legion.

TRIBUNITIAL. } adj. [tribunitius, Lat.]
TRIBUNITIONS. } Suiing a tribune; relating to a tribune.

Let them not come in multitudes, or in a tribunitious manner; for that is to clamour counsels, not to inform. Bacon.

Oh happy ages of our ancestors!
 Beneath the kings and tribunitia! powers,
 One jail did all their criminals restrain. Dryden.

TRIBUTARY. adj. [tributaire, Fr. tributa-rius, Latin.]

1. Paying tribute as an acknowledgment of submission to a master.

Thenceforth this land was tributary made Ambitious Rome, and did their rule obey,
 Till Arthur all that reckoning did defray:
 Yet oft the Briton kings against them strongly twy'd. Spenser.

Whilft Malvern, king of hills, fair Sever overlooks,
 Attended on in state with tributary brooks. Drayton.

The two great empires of the world I know;
 And since the earth none larger does afford,
 This Charles is some poor tributary lord. Dryden.

Around his throne the sea-born brothers stood,
 That swell with tributary urns his flood. Pope.

2. Subject; subordinate.

These he, to grace his tributary gods,
 By course commits to feveral government,
 And gives them leave to wear their saphire crowns,
 And wield their little tridents. Milton.

O'er Judah's king ten thousand tyrants reign,
 Legions of lust, and various pow'rs of ill
 Insult the master's tributary will. Prior.

3. Paid in tribute.

Nor flattery tunes these tributary lays. Concannon.

TRIBUTARY. n. f. [from tribute.] One who pays a stated sum in acknowlegdment of subjection.

All the people therein shall be tributaries unto thee, and serve thee. Deuteronomy.

The Irish lords did only promise to become tributaries to king Henry the second: and such as only pay tribute are not properly subjects, but vassals. Davies.

TRIBUTE. n. f. [tribut, Fr. tributum, Lat.] Payment made in acknowlegdment; subjection.

They that received tribute money said, Doth not your master pay tribute? Matthew.

She receives
 As tribute warmth and light. Milton.

To acknowledge this, was all he did exact;
 Small tribute, where the will to pay was act. Dryden.

TRICK. n. f. [I believe this word comes from trait, Fr. corrupted by pronunciation.] A short time; an instant; a stroke.

If they get never so great spoil at any time, the same they waste in a trice, as naturally delighting in spoil, though it do themselves no good. Spenser.

Just in the nick the cook knock'd thrice,
 And all the waiters in a trice. Milton.

His summons did obey:
 Each serving man with dith in hand
 March'd boldly up like our train'd band,
 Presented, and away. Suckling.

We could raise it uples dark and nice,
 And after solve them in a trice. Hudibras.

So when the war had rais'd a storm,
 I've seen a snake in human form,
 All stam'd with infamy and vice,
 Leap from the dunghill in a trice. Swift.

It seems incredible at first, that all the blood in our bodies should circulate in a trice, in a very few minutes; but it would be more surprising if we knew the short periods of the great circulation of water. Bentley.

A man shall make his fortune in a trice,
 If blest with plant, though but slender sense,
 Feign'd modesty, and real impudence. Young.

TRICHOTOMY. n. f. [τρίχλωμι.] Division into three parts.

Some disturb the order of nature by dichotomies, trichotomies, seven, twelve: let the subject, with the design you have in view, determine the number of parts into which you divide it. Watia.

TRICK. n. f. [treck, Dutch.]

1. A sly fraud.

Sir Thomas More said, that a trick of law had no less power than the wheel of fortune, to lift men up, or cast them down. Ruleigh.

A bantering droll took a journey to Delphos, to try if he could put a trick upon Apollo L'Estrange.

Such a one thinks to find some shelter in my friendship, and I betray him: he comes to me for counsel, and I shew him a trick. South.

He swore by Styx,
 Whate'er she would desire, to grant;
 But wife Ariclia knew his tricks. Swift.

2. A dexterous artifice.

Gather the lowest, and leaving the top,
 Shall teach thee a trick for to double thy crop. Tusser.

And now, as oft in some dissembler'd state,
 On one nice trick depends the gen'ral fate. Pope.

3. A vitious practice.

Suspicion shall be stuck full of eyes:
 For treason is but trusted like a fox,
 Who ne'er to tame, for cherish'd and lock'd up.
 Will have a wild trick of his ancellors. Shakspeare.

I entertain you with somewhat more worthy than the stale exploded trick of fulsome panegyrics. Dryden.

Some friends to vice pretend,
 That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dryden.

4. A juggle; an antick; any thing done to cheat jocosely, or to divert.

A rev'rend prelate stopp'd his coach and fix,
 To laugh a little at our Andrew's tricks. Prior.

5. An unexpected effect.

So fellest foes who broke their sleep,
 To take the one the other, by some chance,
 Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shakspeare.

6. A practice; a manner; a habit. Not in use.

I spoke it but according to the trick: if you'll hang me, you may. Shakspeare.

The trick of that voice I well remember. Shakspeare.

Behold,
 Although the print be little, the whole matter
 And copy of the father; eye, nose, lip,
 The trick of 's frown, his forehead. Shakspeare.

7. A number of cards laid regularly up in play: as, a trick of cards.

To TRICK, v. a. [from the noun; tricker,
 French.]

1. To cheat; to impose on; to defraud.

It is impossible that the whole world should thus conspire to cheat themselves, to put a delusion on mankind, and trick themselves into belief. Stephens.

2. To dress; to decorate; to adorn; properly, to knot. [Trica, in low Latin, signifies a knot of hair; treccia, Italian: hence trace. Matt. Westmonasteriensis says of Godiva of Coventry, that she rode tricas capitis &amp; crines dissolvens.]

And trick them up in knotted curls anew. Drayton.

They turned the imposture upon the king, and gave out, that to defeat the true inheritor he had tricked up a boy in the likeness of Edward Plantagegenet. Bacon.

Horridly trick

With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons, Bak'd and impasted with the parching fires. Shakspeare.

This pillar is but a medley, or a mass of all the precedent ornaments, making a new kind by stealth; and though the most richly tricked, yet the poorest
 in this, that he is a borrower of all his beauty. Watson.

Their heads are tricks with tassels and flowers. Sundys.

Woe! shepherd, weep no more,
 For Læolides, your sorrow, is not dead:

Smile though he be beneath the wat'ry moon,
 So sinks the day-star in the ocean bed,
 And yet more repairs his drooping head,
 And ticks his beams, and with new-spangled ore
 Flames in the forehead of the morning sky. Milton.

Not trick'd and froun'd as she was wont
 With the Atack boy to hunt. Milton.

A daw that had a mind to be sparkish, tricked himself up with all the gay feathers he could muster. L'Estrange.

Love is an airy good opinion makes,
 That tricks and dresses up the gaudy dream. Dryden.

People lavish it profusely in tricking up their children in fine cloaths, and yet slave their minds. Lact.

3. To perform with a light touch; though it may here mean to dress.

Come, the colours and the ground prepare.
 Dip in the rainbow, trick her off in air;
 Chase a firm cloud before it fall, and in it
 Catch ere she change the Cynthia of this minute. Pope.

To TRICK, v. n. To live by fraud.

Thus they jog on, still tricking, never throng,
 And murthering plays, which still they call reviving. Dryden.

TRICKER, n. f. [This is often written trigger; I know not which is right.]
 The catch which being pulled disengages the cock of the gun, that it may give fire.

Pulling aside the tricker we observed, that the force of the spring of the lock was not less abated by the absence of the air. Boyle.

As a goole
 In death contracts his talons close;
 So did the knight, and with one claw
 The tricker of his pistol draw. Hudibras.

TRICKING, v. n. [from trick.] Dress, ornament.

Get us properties and tricking for our farces. Shakspeare.

TRICKISH, adj. [from trick.] Knavishly artful; fraudulently cunning; mische-riously subtle.

All he says is in a loose, slippery, and trick-way of reasoning. Pope.

To TRICKLE, v. n. [Of this word I find no etymology that seems well authorized or probable.] To fall in drops; to run in a slender stream.

He, prick'd with pride,
 Forth spurred fast, adown his courser's side
 The red blood trickling, flam'd the way. Spenser.

Faith bade there trickled softly down
 A gentle stream, whose murmur ring wave did play
 Amongst the pumy stones, and made a sound
 To lull him fast asleep that by it lay. Spenser.

Some notes help sleep; as, the blowing of the wind, and trickling of water, as moving in the spirits a gentle attention, which stills the dissive motion. Bacon.

He weakened by the tickling of his blood. Wyllm.

Beneath his ear the full'ned arrow stood,
 And from the wound appear'd the trickling blood. Dryden.

He lay stretch'd along, his eyes fix upward,
 And ever and anon a silent tear
 Stole down, and tickled from his hoary beard. Dryden.

The emblems of honour wrought on the face
 the brittle materials above-mentioned, trickled down under the first impressions of the heat. Ascham.

Imbrow'n'd with native brouse, to Henry Hauley Tuning his voice and balancing his hands,
 How fluent nonsense trickles from his tongue!
 How sweet the periods, whether said or sung! Pope.

They empty heads console with empty sound
 No more, alas! the voice of fame they hear,
 The balm of dulness trickling in their ear. Pope.

T. R. I.

TRICKY, adj. [from trick.] Pretty. This is a word of endearment. Obsolete.

The fool hath planted in his memory
An array of good words; and I do know
A many fools that stand in better place,
Garnish'd like him, than for a tricky word Defy the matter. Shakespeare.
All this service have I done since I went.
—My tricky spirit! Shakespeare.

TRICORPUS, adj. [tricorpus, Latin.] Having three bodies.

TRIDE, adj. [among hunters; tride, Fr.] Short and ready. Bailey.

TRIDENT, n. f. [trident, Fr. tridens, Lat.] A three-forked sceptre of Neptune. His nature is too noble for the world: He would not flatter Neptune for his trident.

Canst thou with fift'ns pierce him to the quick?
Or in his skull thy barbed trident stick? Sundys.
He lets them wear their taphire crowns,
And weld their little tridents. Milton.
Several find a mystery in every tooth of Neptune's trident. Addison.

TRIDENT, adj. Having three teeth.

TRIDING, n. f. [tridunga, Saxon; rather trithing.] The third part of a county or shire. This division is used only in Yorkshire, where it is corrupted into ruling.

1. Lasting three days.

2. Happening every third day.

TRIENNIAL, adj. [triennis, Lat. triennal, French.]

1. Lasting three years.

I passed the bill for triennial parliaments.

Richard the third, though he came in by blood, yet the short time of his triennial reign he was without any, and proved one of my best lawgivers. Howell.

2. Happening every third year.

TRIER, n. f. [from try.]

1. One who tries experimentally.

The ingenious triers of the German experiment find, that their glads vessel was lighter when the arch had been drawn out than before, by an ounce and very near a third. Boyle.

2. One who examines judicially.

Courts of justice are bound to take notice of acts of parliament, and whether they are truly pleaded or not, and therefore they are the triers of them. Hale.

There should be certain triers or examiners appointed by the state to inspect the genius of every particular boy. Spectator.

3. Tell; one who brings to the test.

You were used

To say, extremity was the trier of spirits;

That common chances common men could bear.

Shakespeare.

TRIFALLOW, v. a. [tres, Latin, and fallow, Sax. a harrow.] To plow land the third time before sowing. Bailey.

The beginning of August is the time of trifallowing, or last plowing before they sow their wheat.

Mortimer.

TRIFLE, v. n. [triflen, Dutch.]

1. To act or talk without weight or dignity; to act with levity; to talk with folly.

When they saw that we ought to abrogate such popish ceremonies as are unprofitable, or else might have other more profitable in their stead, they trifle and they bear the air about nothing which toucheth

T. R. I.

us, unless they mean that we ought to abrogate all popish ceremonies. Hooker.

2. To mock; to play the fool.

Do not believe,

That, from the sense of all civility,

I thus would play and trifle with your reverence. Shakespeare.

3. To indulge light amusement: as, he trifled all his time.

Whatever raises a levity of mind, a trifling spirit, renders the soul incapable of feeling, apprehending, and relishing the doctrines of piety. Law.

4. To be of no importance.

'Tis hard for every trifling debt of two shillings to be driven to law. Spenser.

TO TRIFLE, v. a. To make of no importance. Not in use.

Threefold and ten I can remember well,
Within the volume of which time I've seen Hours dreadful and things strange; but this fore-night

Hath trifled former knowings. Shakespeare.

TRIFLE, n. f. [from the verb.] A thing of no moment.

The instruments of darkness tell us truths;

Win us with honest trifles, to betray us
In deep consequence. Shakespeare.

Old Chancer doth of Topas tell,
Mad Rabelais of Pantagruel,
A later third of Dowdabell,

With such poor trifles playing:

Others the like have labour'd at,
Some of this thing, and some of that,
And many of they know not what,
But that they must be laying. Dryden.

The infinitely greatest contented good is neglected to satisfy the successive uneasiness of our desires pursuing trifles. Locke.

Brunetta's wife in actions great and rare,
But learns on trifles to bestow her care.

Thus every hour Brunetta is to blame,
Because the occasion is beneath her aim.

Hark nought a trifle, though it small appear;

Small lands the mountain, moments make the year:
And trifles hit. Your ears to trifles give,
Or you may die before you truly live. Young.

TRIFLER, n. f. [trifelaar, Dutch.] One who acts with levity; one that talks with folly.

A man cannot tell whether Apelles or Albert Durer were the more triflers, whereof the one would make a personage by geometrical proportions, the other by taking the best parts out of divers faces to make one excellent.

Shall I, who can enchant the boist'rous deep,
Bid Boreas halt, make hills and forests move;

Shall I be buffed by this trifler, love? Granville.

As much as systematical learning is decried by some vain triflers of the age, it is the happiest way to furnish the mind with knowledge. Watts.

Triflers not ev'n in trifles can excel;

'Tis solid bodies only polish well. Young.

TRIFLING, v. f. [from trifle.] Wanting worth; unimportant; wanting weight.

To a soul supported with an assurance of the divine favour, the honours or afflictions of this life will be equally trifling and contemptible. Baker.

TRIFLINGLY, adv. [from trifling.] Without weight; without dignity, without importance.

Those who are carried away with the spontaneous current of their own thoughts, are never labouring their minds in being thus triflingly busy. Locke.

TRILUMINAR, } adj. [triluminaris, Latin.] Having three lights. Dict.

TRIM, adj. [gerjymme, Sax. completed.]

Nice; snug; dressed up. It is used with slight contempt.

'T' one praise in cottage doth take,
Whom 't' other trim bowers do make. Tuffer.

A trim exploit, a manly enterprise,
To conjure tears up in a poor maid's eyes
With your derision. Shakspeare.

The Dorick order has, in comparison of those that follow, a more masculine aspect, and little trimmer than the Tuscan that went before, save a sober garnishment now and then of lions' heads in the cornice, and of triglyphs and metopes always in the frieze. Wotton.

Dost thou not blush to live so like a beast,
So trim, so dissolute, so loosely dress'd? Dryden.

To TRIM. v. a. [trimman, Sax. to build.]

1. To fit out.

Melicious censurers ever,
As ravenous fishes do a vessel follow
That is new trimm'd. Shakspeare.

2. To dress; to decorate.

Our youth got me to play the woman's part,
And I was trimm'd in Julia's gown. Shakspeare.
Pennyroyal and orpin they use in the country to trim their houses, binding it with a lath against a wall. Bacon.

Two arts attend architecture, like her principal gentlewomen, to dress and trim her, picture and sculpture. Wotton.

The victim ox that was for altars prest,
Trimm'd with white ribbons and with garlands dress'd. Dryden.

3. To shave; to clip.

Memphotheth had neither dressed his feet, nor trimm'd his beard. 2 Samuel.
Clip and trim those tender strings like a beard.
Brown.

The barber may trim religion as he pleases.
Howel.

Trim off the small superfluous branches. Mort.

4. To make neat; to adjust.

I found her trimming up the diadem
On her dead mistress's. Shakspeare.

Go, sirrah, to my cell; as you look
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely. Shakspeare.
Yet are the men more loose than they!

More kemb'd, and bath'd, and rubb'd, and trimm'd,
More sleek, more soft, and flacker limb'd. Ben Jonson.
To blast the living gave the dead their due,
And wreaths herself had tainted, trimm'd anew.
Tickel.

When workmen fit a piece into other work, they say they trim in a piece. Mozon.

Each muse in Leo's golden days
Starts from her trance, and trims her wither'd brows.
Pope.

O'er globes, and sceptres, now, on thrones it swells,
Now, trims the midnight lamp in college cells.
Young.

5. To balance a vessel.

Sir Roger put his coachman to trim the boat.
Spectator.

6. It has often up emphatical.

He gave you all the duties of a man,
Trim'd up your praises with a princely tongue,
Spoke your deservings like a chronicle. Shakspeare.

To TRIM. v. n. To balance; to fluctuate between two parties.

If such by trimming and time-serving, which are but two words for the same thing, betray the church by manipulating her pious orders, this will produce confusion. South.

For men to pretend that their will obeys that law, while all besides their will serves the faction;
what is this but a gross, tawdry juggling with their duty, and a kind of trimming it between God and the devil. South.

He who would hear what ev'ry fool could say,
Wou'd never fix his thought, but trim his time away.
Dryden.

TRIM. n. s. Dress; geer; ornaments.
It is now a word of slight contempt.
They come like sacrifices in their trim.
And to the fire-eyed maid of smoky war,
All hot, and bleeding, will we offer them. Shakspeare.

Your labourious and dainty trim, whereas
You made great June angry. Shakspeare.

The goodly London in her gallant trim,
The Phoenix daughter of the vanquish'd old,
Like a rich bride does to the ocean swim.
And on her shadow rides in floating gold. Dryden.

TRIMLY. adv. [from trim.] Nicely;
neatly.

Her yellow golden hair
Was trimly woven, and in tresses wrought. Spenser.
The mother, if of the household of our lady, will have her son cunning and bold, in making him to live trimly. Ascham.

TRIMMER. n. s. [from trim.]

1. One who changes sides to balance parties;
a turncoat.

The same bat taken after by a weasel begged for mercy: No, says the weasel, no mercy to a mouse:
Well, says t'other, but you may see by my wings that I am a bird; and to the bat 'twas in both by playing the trimmer. L'Estrange.

To confound his hated coin,
All parties and religious join,
Whigs, trices, trimmers. Swift.

2. A piece of wood inserted.

Before they put up the frame of ground-plates, they must fit in the summer and the girders, and all the joists and the trimmers for the stair-case.
Moxon.

TRIMMING. n. s. [from trim.] Ornamental appendages to a coat or gown.

Judgment without vivacity of imagination is too heavy, and like a dress without fancy; and the last without the first is too gay, and but all trimming.
Garth.

TRIMNESS. n. s. [from trim.] Neatness;
petty elegance of dress.

TRINAT. adj. [trinus, Lat.] Threefold.

Like many an angel's voice,
Singing before th' eternal majesty,
In their trinal triplicity on high. Spenser.

That far-beaming blaze of majesty,
Wherewith he wont at heav'n's high council table
To sit the midst of trinal unity,
He laid aside. Milton.

TRINE. n. s. [trine, Fr. trinus, Lat.] An aspect of planets placed in three angles of a trigon, in which they are supposed by astrologers to be eminently benign.

To th' other five,
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy. Milton.

Now frequent trines the happier lights among,
And high-mis'd Jove from his dark prison freed,
Those weights took off shut on his planet hung,
Will gloriously the new-hid works succeed. Dryden.

From Aries right-ways draw a line, to end
In the same round, and let that line subtend
An equal triangle; now since the lines Must three times touch the round, and meet three signs.

Where'er they meet in angles those are trines.
Creesh.

To TRINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in a trine aspect.

This advantage age from youth has won,
As not to be outridden, though outrun;
By fortune he was now to Venus trim'd,
And with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd. Dryden.

TRINITY. n. s. [trinitas, Lat. trinité, Fr.] The incomprehensible union of the Three Persons in the Godhead.

Touching the picture of the trinity, I hold it blasphemous and utterly unlawful. Pencham.

In my whole essay there is not any thing like an objection against the trinity. Locke.

TRINET. n. s. [This Skinner derives somewhat harshly from trinquet, Fr. trinchetto, Ital. a topfall. I rather imagine it corrupted from tricket, some petty finery or decoration.]

1. Toys; ornaments of dress; superfluities of decoration.

Beauty and use can so well agree together, that of all the trinkets wherewith they are adorned, there is not one but serves to some necessary purpose.
Sidney.

They throng who should buy first, as if my trinkets had been hallowed. Shakspeare.
Let her but have three wrinkles in her face,
Soon will you hear the saucy steward say,
Pack up with all your trinkets, and away.

She was not hung about with toys and trinkets,
tweezer-cases, pocket-glasses. Arbuthnot.
How Johnny wheedled, threaten'd, fawn'd,
Till Phyllis all her trinkets pawn'd. Swift.

2. Things of no great value; tackle; tools.
What husbandlie-husbands, except they be fools,
But handfom have storehouse for trinkets and tools? Tupper.

Go with all your servants and trinkets about you.
L'Estrange.

TRIOBOLAR. adj. [tribolaris, Lat.] Vile;
mean; worthless.

Turn your libel into verse, and then it may pass current amongst the balladmongers for a triobolar ballad. Chrysol.

To TRIP. v. a. [treper, French; trippen, Dutch.]

1. To supplant; to throw by striking the feet from the ground by a sudden motion.

He conjunct
Tripp'd me behind. Shakspeare.

Be you contented,
To have a son set your decrees at nought,
To trip the course of law, and blunt the sword
That guards the peace and safety of your person. Shakspeare.

2. To strike from under the body.

I tript up thy heels and beat thee. Shakspeare.
The words of Hobbes's defence trip up the heels of his cause; I had once resolved. To resolve pre-supposeth deliberation, but what deliberation can there be of that which is inevitably determined by causes without ourselves? Bramhall.

3. To catch; to detect.

These women
Can trip me, if I err; who, with wet cheeks,
Were present when she smil'd. Shakspeare.

To TRIP. v. n.

1. To fall by losing the hold of the feet.

2. To fail; to err; to be deficient.

Saint Jerome, who pardons not over-easily his adversaries, if any where they chance to trip, presents him as thereby making all sorts of men God's enemies. Hooker.

Virgil is so exact in every word, that none can be changed but for a worse: he pretends sometimes to trip, but it is to make you think him in danger when most secure. Dryden.

Many having used their utmost diligence to secure a retention of the things committed to the memory, cannot certainly know where it will trip and tail them. South.

Will shines in mixed company, making his real ignorance appear a seeming one: our club has caught him tripping, at which times they never spare him. Spectator.

Several writers of uncommon erudition would expose my ignorance, if they caught me tripping in a matter of so great moment. Spectator.

3. To stumble; to titubate.

I may have the idea of a man's drinking till he tongues trips, yet not know that it is called drunk-eness. Locke.

4. To run lightly.

In silence sad,
Trip we after the night's shade. Shakspeare.
The old saying is, the third pays for all; the tri-plex, fir, is a good tripping measure. Shakspeare.

He throws his arm, and with a long-drawn dash Blends all together; then distimely trips
From this to that; then quick returning skips
And snatches this again, and pounces there. Crahan.

TRI

On old Lycoris, or Cytherea's hour,
Trip no more in twilight ranks;
Though Bryonanth your loss deplores,
A better foil shall give ye thanks.
She bounded by, and tripp'd to fight,
They had not time to take a steady fight.
Slay, nymph, he cried, I follow not a foe;
Thus from the lion trips the trembling doe.

Milton.

Well thou dost to hide from common sight
Thy chaste intrigues, too bad to bear the light:
Nor doubt I, but the silver-footed dame
Tripping from sea on such an erand came.
He'll make a pretty figure in a triumph,
And serve to trip before the victor's chariot.

Dryden.

The lower plaits of the drapery in antique figures in sculpture and painting, seem to have gathered the wind when the person is in a posture of tripping forward.

Addison.

In Britain's isles, as Heylin notes,
The ladies trip in petticoats.
They gave me instructions how to slide down,
and trip up the steepest slopes.

Pope.

To take a short voyage.
TRIP, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A stroke or catch by which the wrestler supplants his antagonist.
O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy calf?
Or wilt not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow?

Shakspeare.

He stript for wrestling, suens his limbs with oil,
And watches with a trip his foe to foil.
It was a noble time when trips and Cornish lings could make a man immortal.

Addison.

2. A stumble by which the foothold is lost.
3. A failure; a mistake.

He saw his way, but in to swift a pace,
To chafe the ground might be to lose the race:
They then, who of each triph th' advantage take,
Fad but those faults which they want wit to make.

Dryden.

Each seeming trip, and each digressive start,
Displays their case the more, and deep-plann'd art.

Harte.

4. A short voyage or journey.
I took a trip to London on the death of the queen.

Pope.

TRIPARTITE, adj. [tripartite, Fr. tripartitus, Lat.] Divided into three parts; having three correspondent copies; relating to three parties.

Our indentures tripartite are drawn. Shakspeare.

TRIPPE, n. f. [tripe, Fr. trippa, Italian and Spanish.]

1. The intestines; the guts.
How say you to a fat tripe finely broil'd?
—I like it well.

Shakspeare.

In private draw your poultry, clean your tripe.

King.

2. It is used in ludicrous language for the human belly.

TRIPPDAL, adj. [tres and pes, Latin.]

Having three feet.

TRIPETALOUS, adj. [τριπῆ and ὀττῆρος.]

Having a flower consisting of three leaves.

TRIPHTHONG, n. f. [τριπῆθῳγ, Fr. triphtongue, Lat.]

A coalition of three vowels to form one sound: as, ean, eye.

TRIPLE, adj. [triple, Fr. triplez, tripulus, Lat.]

1. Threefold; consisting of three conjoined.

See in him
The triple pillar of the world transform'd into a trumpet's stool.

Shakspeare.

O night and shades,
How are ye join'd with hell in triple knot,
Against th' unarm'd weakness of one virgin,
Alone and helpless!

Milton.

TRI

Thrice happy pair! so near ally'd
In royal blood and virtue too:
Now love has you together ty'd,
May none this triple knot undo!

Waller.

By thy triple shape as thou art seen
In heav'n, earth, hell, grant this.

Dryden.

Strong Alcides, after he had slain
The triple Geryon, drove from conquer'd Spain
His captive herds.

Dryden.

Out bound the mastiff of the triple head;
Away the hare with double swiftness fled.

Swift.

2. Treble; three times repeated.
We have taken this as a moderate measure betwixt the highest and lowest; but if we had taken only a triple proportion, it would have been sufficient.

Barnet.

If then the atheist can have no imagination of more senses than five, why doth he suppose that a body is capable of more? If we had double or triple as many, there might be the same suspicion for a greater number without end.

Bentley.

To TRIPPLE, v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To treble; to make thrice as much, or as many.

To what purpose should words serve, when nature hath more to declare than groans and strong cries; more than streams of bloody sweat; more than his doubled and tripled prayers can express?

Hooker.

It these helplessness should gum admittance, in no long space of time his limited quantity would be tripled upon us.

Swift.

2. To make threefold.
Time, action, place, are so preserv'd by thee,
That e'en Cornelia's sight with envy, too
Th' alliance of his tripl'd unity.

Dryden.

TRIPPLET, n. f. [from triple.]

1. Three of a kind.
There sit C—nts, D—ks, and Harrisons,
How they swagger, from their garrison;
Such a triplet could you tell
Where to find on this side hell?

Swift.

2. Three verses rhyming together: as,
Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full rebounding line,
The long to go slack march and energy divine.

Pope.

Some wretched lines from this neglected hand
May find my hero in the foreign strand, Warm with new fires, and pleas'd with new commend.

Prior.

I frequently make use of triplet rhymes because they bound the sense, and ring the last verse of the triplet a pindaric.

Dryden.

TRIPPLICATE, adj. [from triplex, Latin.]

Made thrice as much.
Triplicate ratio, in geometry, is the ratio of cubes to each other, which ought to be distinguished from triple.

Harris.

All the parts, in height, length, and breadth, bear a duplicate or triplicate proportion one to another.

Crowe.

TRIPPLICATION, n. f. [from triplicate.]

The act of trebling, or adding three together.

Since the margin of the visible horizon in the heavenly globe is parallel with that in the earthly, accounted but one hundred and twenty miles diameter; sense must needs measure the azimuths, or vertical circles, by triplication of the same diameter of one hundred and twenty.

Glazette.

TRIPPLICITY, n. f. [triplicité, Fr. from triplex, Latin.] Tribenels; state of being threefold.

It was a dangerous triplicity to a monarchy, to have the arms of a foreigner, the discontents of subjects, and the title of a pretender to meet.

Bacon.

Affect not duplicities nor triplicities, nor any certain number of parts in your division of things.

Watts.

TRIPNADAM, n. f. An herb.
Tripnadum is used in salads.

Martiner.

TRIPPOD, n. f. [tripus, Lat.] A seat with three feet, such as that from which the priests of Apollo delivered oracles.

Two tripods cast in antick mould,
With two great talents of the sack gold.

Dryden.

TRI

TRI'POLY, n. f. [I suppose from the place whence it is brought.] A sharp cutting sand.

In polishing glass with putty, or tripoly, it is not to be imagined that those substances can by grating and fretting the glass bring all its least particles to an accurate polish.

Newton.

TRI'POS, n. f. A tripod. See TRIPOD.

Welcome all that lead or follow,
To the oracle of Apollo;
Here he speaks out of his pottle,
Or the tripod, his tower bottle.

Ben Jonson.

Cra'd fool, who would'st be thought an oracle,
Come down from off the tripod, and speak plain.

Dryden.

TRI'PPER, n. f. [from trip.] One who trips.

TRI'PPING, adj. [from trip.] Quick;
nimble.

The clear sun of the fresh wave largely drew,
As after thirst; which made their flowing shrink
From standing lake, to tripping ebb; that stole
With soft foot towards the deep.

Milton.

TRI'PPING, n. f. [from trip.] Light dance.

Back, shepherds, back, enough your play,
Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes.

Milton.

TRI'PPINGLY, adv. [from tripping.] With agility; with swift motion.

This ditty after me
Sing, and dance it trippingly.

Shakspeare.

Speak the speech trippingly on the tongue; but if you mouth it as many of our players do, I had as lieve the town-crier had spoke my lines.

Shakspeare.

TRI'PTOTE, n. f. [triptoton, Latin.] A noun used but in three cases.

Clarke.

TRI'PU'DIARY, adj. [tripudium, Lat.] Per-from tri syllable.] Consisting of three syllables.

TRI'SYLLABLE, n. f. [trisyllabu, Latin.]
A word consisting of three syllables.

TRITE, adj. [tritum, Lat.] Worn out, stale; common; not new.

These duties cannot but appear of infinite concern when we reflect how uncertain our time is,
this may be thought to trite and obvious a reflection,
that none can want to be reminded of it.

Boyer.

She gives her tongue no moment's rest,
In phrases batter'd, stale, and trite,
Which modern ladies call polite.

Swift.

TRI'TENESS, n. f. [from trite.] Staleness;
commonness.

TRI'THEISM, n. f. [tritheisme, Fr. trix and Sic.] The opinion which holds three distinct gods.

TRI

TRITURABLE. adj. [triturable, Fr. from trituration.] Possible to be pounded or comminuted.

It is not only triturable and reducible to powder by contrition, but will not subsist in a violent fire.

Brown.

TRITURATION. n. f. [trituration, French; trituro, Lat.] Reduction of any substances to powder upon a stone with a muller, as colours are ground: it is also called levigation.

He affirmeth, that a pumice stone-powdered is lighter than one entire; that abatement can hardly be avoided in trituration.

Brown.

TRIVET. n. f. [See TREVER.] Any thing supported by three feet.

The best at horse-race he ordain'd a lady for his prize.

Generally praiseful; fair and young, and skill'd in housewiferies

Of all kind fitting; and withal a trivet, that enclos'd

Twenty-two measures.

Chapman.

The trivet table of a foot was lame;
A blot which prudent Baucis overcame,
Who thrulls beneath the limping leg a therd.

Dryden.

TRIVIAL. adj. [trivial, French; trivialis, Latin.]

1. Vile; worthless; vulgar; such as may be picked up in the highway.

Be subjects great, and worth a poet's voice,
For men of sense despise a trivial choice.

Roscommon.

2. Light; trifling; unimportant; inconsiderable. This use is more frequent, though less just.

This argues confidence in your grace,
But the respects thereof are nice and trivial,
All circumstances well considered.

Shakespeare.

This way of measuring felicity was so natural to him, that it would occur even in the most trivial instances.

Fell.

See you mad fools, who, for some trivial right,
For love, or for mistaken honour, fight.

Dryden.

Were they only some slight and trivial indiscretions, to which the example of the world exposed us, it might perhaps not much concern our religion.

Rogers.

In every work regard the writer's end;
And if the means be just, the conduct true,
Applause, in spite of trivial faults, is due.

Pope.

The ancient poets are like many modern ladies; let an action be never so trivial in itself, they always make it appear of the utmost importance.

Pope.

TRIVIALLY. adv. [from trivial.]

1. Commonly; vulgarly.

Money is not the sinews of war, as is trivially said, where the sinews of men's arms, in effeminate people, fail.

Bacon.

Milton.

If fools admire, or whining coxcombs tease,
The vain conquests the trifling triumphs boast.

Legie.

4. Joy for success.

Great triumph and rejoicing was in heaven.

Milton.

5. A conquering card, now called trump, See TRUMP.

TRIUMPH. v. n. [triumpho, Latin; trionpher, French.] This word is always accented in prose on the first syllable, but in poetry sometimes on the last.]

1. To celebrate a victory with pomp; to rejoice for victory.

The triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment.

Job.

Your victory, alas! begets my fears;
Can you not then triumph without my tears?

Dryden.

2. To obtain victory.

This great commander fought many times to persuade Solyman to forbear to use his forces any farther against the christians, over whom he had sufficiently triumphed, and turn them upon the Persians.

Knolles.

Then all this earthly grossness quit,
Attir'd with stars, we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over death, and chance, and time.

Milton.

There fix thy faith, and triumph o'er the world;
For who can help, or who can save besides?

Rowe.

While blooming youth and gay delight
Sit on thy ruddy cheeks content,
Thou hast, my dear, undoubted right
To triumph o'er this destin'd breath.

Prior.

3. To insult upon an advantage gained.

How ill becoming is it in thy sex
To triumph, like an Amazonian trull!

Shakespeare.

Sorrow on all the pack of you,
That triumph thus upon my misery!

Shakespeare.

Our grand foe,
Who now triumphs, and in th' excess of joy
Sole reigning holds the tyranny of heaven.

Milton.

TRIUMPHAL. adj. [triumphal, French; triumphalis, Lat. from triumph.] Used in celebrating victory.

He left only triumphal garments to the general.

Bacon.

Ye so near heav'n's door,
Triumphal with triumphal act have met.

Milton.

Steel could the works of mortal pride confound,
And new triumphal arches to the ground.

Pope.

Left we should for honour take
The drunken quarrel of a rake;
Or think it fented in a fear,
Or on a proud triumphal car.

Swift.

TRIUMPHAL. n. f. [triumphalia, Latin; triumphal ornaments.] A token of victory. Not in use.

He to his crew, that fat consulting, brought Joyless triumphs of his boy'd success.

Milton.

Shakespeare.

It was drawn as a triumphal chariot, which at the same time both follows and triumphs.

South.

2. Rejoicing as for victory.

Think you but that I know our state secure,
I would be so triumphant as I am?

Shakespeare.

Off with the traitor's head;
And now to London with triumphal march,
There to be crowned.

Shakespeare.

Successful beyond hope, to lead ye forth
Triumphant out of this infernal pit.

Milton.

3. Victorious; graced with conquest.

As in the militant church men are excommunicate, not so much for their offence, as for their obstinacy; so shall it be in the church triumphant: the kingdom of heaven shall be barred against men; not so much for their sin committed, as for their lying therein without repentance.

Perkins.

He speedily through all the hierarchies
Intends to pass triumphant, and give laws.

Milton.

Athena, war's triumphant maid,
The happy son will, as the father, aid.

Pope.

TRIUMPHANTLY. adv. [from triumphant.]

1. In a triumphant manner in token of victory; joyfully as for victory.

Victory, with little loss doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French;

Who are at hand triumphantly display'd.

Shakespeare.

Herself in person went to seek the sacred cross Whereon our Saviour died; which found, as it was fought,

From Salem unto Rome triumphantly she brought.

Dryden.

Through armed ranks triumphantly she drives,
And with one glance commands ten thousand men.

Granville.

2. Victoriously; with success.

Thou must, as a foreign recreant, be led
With manacles along our street: or else
Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin,
And bear the palm.

Shakespeare.

3. With insolent exultation.

A mighty governing eye goes round the world, and his almost banished truth out of it; and reigning triumphantly in its stead, is the source of most of those confusions that plague the universe.

South.

TRIUMPHER. n. f. [from triumph.] One who triumphs.

These words become your lips, as they pass through them,
And enter in our ears, like great triumphs
In their applauding gates.

Shakespeare.

August was dedicated to Augustus by the senate, because in the same month he was the first time created consul, and thrice triumphator in Rome.

Pluchin.

TRIUMVIRATE. n. f. [triumviratus, or triumviri, Latin.] A coalition or concurrence of three men.

Lepidus of the triumvirate
Should be depos'd.

Shakespeare.

The triumviri, the three corner cap of low During that triumvirate of kings, Henry the eighth of England, Francis the first of France, Charles the fifth emperor of Germany, none of three could win a palm of ground but the other two would balance it.

Bacon.

With these the Piercies then confederate,
And, as three heads, conjoin in one intent,
And, instituting a triumvirate,
Do part the land in triple government.

Dryden.

From distant regions fortune leads
An odd triumvirate of friends.

South.

TRICENE. adj. [tres and unus, Lat.] As once three and one.

We read in scripture of a trium deity, of God made flesh in the womb of a virgin, and crucified
by the Jews.

Pope.

TO TROAT. v. a. [with hunters.] To cry
as a buck does at rutting time.

Dryden.

TROCAR. n. f. [trocar, corrupted from tro- quart, French.] A surgical instrument.

The handle of the trocar is of wood, the ear of silver, and the perforator of steel.

South.

TROCHICAL. adj. [trochaïque, French; trochæicus, Lat.] Consisting of troches.

TROCHANTERS. n. f. [τροχαντήρες.] Two processes of the thigh bone, called re- tor major and minor, in which the heads of many muscles terminate.

Dutch.

TROCHEE. n. f. [trocheus, Lat. trochæus, French; τροχαιος.] A foot used in Latin poetry, consisting of a long and short syllable.

TROCHICKS. n. s. [τροχικός, τροχική, a wheel.] The science of rotatory motion.

There succeeded new inventions and horologies, composed of trochicks, or the artifice of wheels, whereof some are kept in motion by weight, others without.

It is requisite that we rightly understand some principles in trochicks, or the art of wheel instruments; as chiefly, the relation betwixt the parts of a wheel and those of a balance, the several proportions in the semidiameter of a wheel being answerable to the sides of a balance.

TROCHINGS. n. s. The branches on a deer's head.

TROCHISCH. n. s. [τροχίσκος; trochisque, French; trochiscus, Latin.] A kind of tablet or lozenge.

The trochisks of vipers, so much magnified, and the flesh of snakes some ways coarcted and corrected.

TROD. } The part. pass. of tread.

TRODDEN. } Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the gentiles.

Thou, infernal serpent, shalt not long Rule in the clouds; like an autumnal star, Or lightning, thou shalt fall from heav'n trod down Under his feet.
E'en the rough rocks with tender myrtle bloom, And trodden weeds send out a rich perfume.

TRODE. The preterit of tread.

They trode the grapes, and made merry.

TRODE. n. s. [from trode, pret. of tread.]

Footing.
The trode is not so tickle.
They never set foot on that same trode.
But baulke their right way, and strain abroad.

TROGLODYTE. n. s. [τρογλοδύτης.] One who inhabits caves of the earth.

Procure me a troglodyte footman, who can catch a roe at his full speed.

TO TROLL. v. a. [trollen, to roll, Dutch; perhaps from trochlea, Latin; a thing to turn round.] To move circularly; to drive about.

With the phant'ies of hey troll,
Troll about the bridal bowl,
And divide the broad-bread cake,
Round about the bride's stake.

TO TROLL. v. n.

1. To roll; to run round.
How pleasant, on the banks of Styx,
To troll in a coach and six!

2. To fish for a pike with a rod which has a pulley toward the bottom, which I suppose gives occasion to the term.

Not dunn I ponds the golden carp to take,
Nor trouble for pikes, discompleers of the lake.

TRO'LOP. n. s. [A low word, I know not whence derived.] A flatteringly loose woman.

TRO'LMYDAMES. n. s. [Of this word I know not the meaning.]

A fellow I have known to go about with trolmydames. I knew him once a servant of the prince.

TRO'NAGE. n. s. Money paid for weighing.

TROOP. n. s. [troupe, Fr. troppa, Italian; troupe, Dutch; trop, Swedish; troppa, low Latin.]

1. A company; a number of people collected together.

That which should accompany old age,
As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends,
I must not look to have.

Saw you not a blessed troop
Invite me to a banquet, whose bright faces
Cast thousand beams upon me like the sun?

As the mind, by putting together the repeated ideas of unity, makes the collective mode of any number, as a score, or a gross; so by putting together several particular substances, it makes collective ideas of substances, as a troop, an army.

2. A body of soldiers.

Aeneas seeks his absent foe,
And sends his slaughter'd troops to shades below.

3. A small body of cavalry.

To TROOP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To march in a body.
I do not, as an enemy to peace,
Troop in the throngs of military men,
But rather shew a while like fearful war.

They anon
With hundreds, and with thousands, trooping came, Attended!

Armies at the call of trumpet
Troop to their standard.

2. To march in haste.
Yonder shines Aurora's harbinger,
At whose approach ghosts, wand'ring here and there,
Troop home to churchyards.

The dry streets flow'd with men,
That troop'd up to the king's capacious court.

3. To march in company.
I do invest you jointly with my power,
Preheminence, and all the large effects
That troop with majesty.

TROOPER. n. s. [from troop.] A horse soldier. A trooper fights only on horseback; a dragoon marches on horseback, but fights either as a horseman or footman.

Custom makes us think well of any thing: what can be more indecent than for any to wear boots but troopers and travellers? yet not many years since it was all the fashion.

TROPE. n. s. [τρόπος; trope, Fr. tropus, Lat.] A change of a word from its original signification; as, the clouds forecast rain, for foreflow.

For rhetoric he could not ope
His mouth, but out there flew a trope.

If this licence be included in a single word, it admits of tropes; if in a sentence, of figures.

TROPHIED. adj. [from trophy.] Adorned with trophies.

Some greedy minion, or imperious wife;
The trophy'd arches, story'd halls invade,
And haunt their slumbers in the pompous shade.

TROPHY. n. s. [trophaum, trophæum, Lat.] Something shown or treasured up in proof of victory.

What trophy then shall I most fit devise,
In which I may record the memory
Of my love's conquest, peerless beauty's prize
Adorn'd with honour, love, and chastity?

To have borne
His braided helmet and his bended sword
Before him through the city, he forbids;
Giving all trophy, signal, and ostent,
Quite from himself to God.

There lie thy bones,
Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb.
Twice will I not review the morning's rife,
Till I have torn that trophy from thy back,
And split thy heart for wearing it.

In ancient times, the trophies erected upon the place of the victory, the triumphs of the generals upon their return, the great donatives upon the disbanding of the armies, were things able to inflame all men's courage.

Around the poles hung helmets, darts, and spears,
And captive chariots, axes, shields, and bars,
And broken beaks of ships, the trophies of their wars.

The tomb with many arms and trophies grace,
To shew posterity Elpeur was.
Set up each senseless wretch for nature's baill,
On whom praise shines, as trophies on a post.

TROPICAL. adj. [from trape.]

1. Rhetorically changed from the original meaning.
A strict and literal acceptance of a loose and tropical expression was a second ground.

The words are tropical or figurative, and import an hyperbole, which is a way of expressing things beyond what really and naturally they are in themselves.

2. [from tropick.] Placed near the tropick; belonging to the tropick.
The pine apple is one of the tropical fruits.

TROPICK. n. s. [tropique, Fr. tropicus, Lat.] The line at which the sun turns back, of which the north has the tropick of Cancer, and the south the tropick of Capricorn.

Under the tropick is our language spoke,
And part of Flanders hath receiv'd our yoke.

Since on ev'ry sea, on ev'ry coast,
Your men have been distress'd, your navy lost,
Seven times the sun has either tropick view'd,
The winter banish'd, and the spring renew'd.

TROPOLOGICAL. adj. [tropologique, Fr. τρόπος and λόγος.] Varied by tropes; changed from the original import of the words.

TROPOLOGY. n. s. [τρόπος and λόγος.] A rhetorical mode of speech including tropes, or a change of some word from the original meaning.

Not attaining the deuterology and second intention of words, they omit their imperi consequences, coherence, figures, or tropologies, and are not persuaded beyond their literalities.

TROUSERS. n. s. [troussée, Fr.] Breeches; hose. See TROUSE.

You rode like a kern of Ireland; your French hose off, and in your truit trowsers.

TO TROT. v. n. [trotter, Fr. trotten, Dutch.]

1. To move with a high jolting pace.
Poor Tom, that hath made him proud of heart,
To ride on a bay trotting horse, over four-miled bridges, to court his own shadow for a tator.

Whom doth time trot withal?
—He trots hard with a young maid, between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemnized: if the interim be but a fewnight, time's pace is so hard, that it seems the length of several years.

Take a gentle trotting horse, and come up and see your old friends.

2. To walk fast; or, to travel on foot: in a ludicrous or contemptuous sense.

TUOT. n. s. [trot, Fr. from the verb.]

1. The jolting high pace of a horse.
His honesty is not
So loose or easy, that a rustling wind
Can blow away, or glitt'ring look a blind;
Who rides his sure and even trot,
While the world now rides by, now lags behind.

Here lieth one who did most truly prove,
That he could never die while he could move;
So hung his destiny, never to rot
While he might still jog on and keep his trot.

The virtuous's saddle will amble when the world is upon the hardest trot.

TRO

2. An old woman, in contempt. I know not whence derived.

Give him gold enough, and marry him to an old trot with ne'er a tooth in her head: why, nothing comes amiss, for money comes withal. Shakespeare.
How now, bold-face! cries an old trot; firrah, we eat out own hens, and what you eat you steal. L'Estrange.

TROT. n. f. [trouth, old English; тпоѳъ, Saxon.]

1. Belief; faith; fidelity.

Saint Withold met the night-mare,
Bid her light and her troth plight. Shakespeare.
Stephen assails the realm, obtains the crown,
Such tumults raising as torment them both:
Th' afflicted state, divided in their troth
And partial faith, most miserable grows, Endures the while. Daniel.

2. Truth; verity.

In troth, thou'rt able to instruct grey hairs,
And teach the wily African deceit. Addison.

TROTHLESS. adj. [from troth.] Faithless; treacherous.

Thrall to the faithless waves and trothless sky. Fairfax.

TROTHPLIGHT. adj. [troth and plight.] Betrothed; affianced.

This, your son in law,
Is trothplight to your daughter. Shakespeare.

TROTTER. n. f. [from trot.]

1. One that walks a jolting pace.

2. A sheep's foot.

TO TROUBLE. v. n. [troubler, Fr.]

1. To disturb; to perplex.

An hour before the worshipp'd sun
Peer'd through the golden window of the east,
A troubled mind drew me to walk abroad. Shakespeare.

But think not here to trouble holy rest. Milton.
Never trouble yourself about those faults which age will cure. Locke.

2. To afflict; to grieve.

It would not trouble me to be slain for thee, but much it torments me to be slain by thee. Sidney.
They pertinaciously maintain, that afflictions are no real evils, and therefore a wise man ought not to be troubled at them. Tillotson.

Though it is in vain to be troubled for that which I cannot chuse, yet I cannot chuse but be afflicted. Tillotson.

3. To distress; to make uneasy.

He had credit enough with his master to provide for his own interest, and troubled not himself for that of others. Clarendon.
Do not dismay'd nor troubled at these tidings. Milton.

He was sore troubled in mind, and much distressed. 1 Maccabees.

4. To busy; to engage overmuch.

Murtha, thou art careful, and troubled about many things. Luke.

5. To give occasion of labour to. A word of civility or slight regard.

I will not trouble myself to prove that all terms are not definable, from that progress in infinitum which it will lead us into. Locke.

6. To tease; to vex.

The boy so troubles me;
'Tis past enduring. Shakespeare.

7. To disorder; to put into agitation or commotion.

A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled;
Muddy, ill seeming, thick, bereft of beauty. Shakespeare.

An angel went down into the pool and troubled the water; whosoever first after the troubling stepped in was made whole. John.
God looking forth will trouble all his host. Milton.

Hear how the ear employs;
Their office is the troubled air to take. Devis.

Seas are troubled when they do revoke
Their flowing waves into themselves again. Dante.

It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water. South.

The best law in our days is that which continues our judges during their good behaviour, without leaving them to the mercy of such who might, by an undue influence, trouble and pervert the course of justice. Addison.

Thy force alone their fury can restrain,
And smooth the waves, or swell the troubled main. Dryden.

8. [In low language.] To sue for a debt.

TROUBLE. n. f. [trouble, Fr.]

1. Disturbance; perplexity.

They all his host derided, while they stood
A while in trouble. Milton.

2. Affliction; calamity.

Double, double, toil and trouble,
Fire burn, and cauldron bubble. Shakespeare.

3. Molestation; obstruction; inconvenience.

Take to thee from among the cherubim
The choice of flaming warriors, left the fend
Some new trouble raise. Milton.

4. Uneasiness; vexation.

I have dream'd
Of much offence and trouble, which my mind
Knew never till this irksome night. Milton.

TROUBLE-STATE. n. f. [trouble and state.] Disturber of a community; publick makebate.

Those fair baits these trouble-states still use,
Pretence of common good, the king's ill course,
Must be cast forth. Daniel.

TROUBLER. n. f. [from trouble.] Disturber; confounder.

Unhappy falls that hard necessity,
Quoth he, the troubler of my happy peace,
And vowed foe of my felicity. Spenser.
Heav'n's hurl down their indignation
On thee, thou troubler of the poor world's peace! Shakespeare.

The best temper of minds desireth good name and true honour; the lighter, popularity and applause; the more depraved, subjection and tyranny; as is seen in great conquerors and troublers of the world, and more in arch-heretics. Bacon.

He knowing well that nation must decline,
Whole chief support and sinews are of cow,
Our nation's solid virtue did oppose

To the rich troublers of the world's repose. Waller.
The sword justly drawn by us can scarce safely be sheathed, till the power of the great troubler of our peace be pared, as to be under no apprehensions for the future. Atterbury.

TROUBLESOME. adj. [from trouble.]

1. Vexatious; uneasy; afflictive.

Heav'n knows
By what bye-paths and indirect crooked ways
I met this crown; and I myself know well
How troublesome it sat upon my head:
To thee it shall descend with better quiet. Shakespeare.

He must be very wife that can forbear being troubled at things very troublesome. Tillotson.

2. Full of molestation.

Though our passage through this world be rough and troublesome, yet the trouble will be but short, and the rest and contentment at the end will be an ample recompence. Atterbury.

3. Burdensome; tiresome; wearisome.

My mother will never be troublesome to me. Pope.

4. Full of teasing business.

All this could not make us accuse her, though it made us almost pine away for sight, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness. Sidney.

5. Slightly harassing.

They, as'd the putting off
These troublesome disguises which we wear. Milton.

Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,
Being so troublesome a bed-fellow? Shakespeare.

6. Unseasonably engaging; improperly importuning.

She of late is lightened of her womb,
That her to see should be but troublesome. Spenser.

TRO

7. Importunate; teasing.

Two or three troublesome old women never let me have a quiet night's rest with knocking me up. Arbutnot.

TROUBLESOMELY. adv. [from troublesome.] Vexatiously; wearisomely; unseasonably; importunately.

Though men will not be so troublesomely critical as to correct others in the use of words, yet, where truth is concerned, it can be no fault to define their explication. Locke.

TROUBLESOMENESS. n. f. [from troublesome.]

1. Vexatiousness; uneasiness.

The lord treasurer complained of the troublesomeness of the place for that the exchequer was empty; the chancellor answered, Be of good cheer, for now you shall see the bottom of your business at the first. Bacon.

2. Importunity; unseasonableness.

TROUBLOUS. adj. [from trouble.] Tumultuous; confused; disordered; put into commotion. An elegant word, but disused.

He along would fly
Upon the streaming rivers, sport to find;
And oft would dare tempt the troublous wind. Spenser.

Soon as they this mock king did espy,
Their troublous suite they staid by and by. Spenser.

No other noise, nor people's troublous cries,
As still are wont t' annoy the walled town,
Might there be heard. Spenser.

As a tall ship tossed in troublous seas
Whom raging winds threaten to make the prey
Of the rough rocks. Spenser.
Then, masters, look to see a troublous world. Shakespeare.

Only one supply
In four years troublous and expensive reign. Daniel.

TROUVER. n. f. [trouver, French.] In the common law, is an action which a man hath against one that having found any of his goods refuseth to deliver them upon demand. Conrad.

TROUGH. n. f. [тпогъ, тпох, Sax. troch, Dutch; trou, Danish; trang, Icelandic; truogo, Italian.] Any thing hollowed and open longitudinally on the upper side.

The bloody boar
That spoil'd your summer fields and fruitful vines Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes a trough. Shakespeare.

In your embowel'd bowoms.
They had no ships but big troughs, which they call canoes. Locke.

Where there is a good quick fall of rain water, lay a half trough of stone, of a good length, the foot deep, with one end upon the high ground, the other upon the low; cover the trough with boards a good thickness, and cast sand upon the top of the brakes, the lower end of the trough will run like a spring of water. Bacon.

Some log, perhaps, upon the water swim,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became.

And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Dante.
That also is accounted virgin quicksilver, which, having no need to pass the fire, is separated by water first in a sieve, and afterwards in a long trough. Locke.

The water dissolves the particles of salt mixed in the stone, and is conveyed by long troughs and canals from the mines to Hall, where it is received in vast cisterns, and boiled off. Locke.

TO TROUL. v. n. [trollen, to roll, Dutch.] See TROLL.

1. To move volubly.

Bred only, and completed, to the taste
Of lustful appetite; to sing, to dance,
To dress, and trowl the tongue, and roll the eye. Milton.

TRO

2. To utter volubly.

Let us be jocund. Will you troul the catch you taught me while ere? Shakespeare.

TO TROUCE. v. a. [derived by Skinner from trone or tronson, Fr. a club.] To punish by an indictment or information. More probable, and like to hold than hand, or seal, or breaking gold; For which to many, that renounc'd Their plighted contracts, have been trounc'd. Hudibras.

If you talk of peaching, I'll peach first; I'll trounce you for offering to corrupt my honesty. Dryden.

TROUSERS. } n. f. [troussé, Fr. truih, Erse.] TROUSERS. } Breeches; hose. See TROUSERS.

The leather quilted jack serves under his shirt of mail, and to cover his trouze on horseback. Spenser.
The unfitness and pain in the leg may be helped by wearing a laced stocking; a laced trouze will do as much for the thigh. Wifeman.

TROUR. n. f. [trubur, Sax. troda, truta, trutta, Lat.]

1. A delicate spotted fish, inhabiting brooks and quick streams.

The pond will keep trout and salmon in their seasonable plight, but not in their reddish grain. Carew.

Worse than the anarchy at sea,
Where fishes on each other prey;
Where every trout can make as high rants
Or his inferiours as our tyrants. Swift.

2. A familiar phrase for an honest, or perhaps for a silly fellow.

Here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling. Shakespeare.

TO TROW. v. n. [træoðian, Saxon; træc, Danish.]

1. To think; to imagine; to conceive. A word now disused, and rarely used even in ancient writers but in familiar language.

What haughtiness, trow you, can be observed in that speech, which is made one knows not to whom? Sidney.

Is there any reasonable man, trow you, but will judge it meet that our ceremonies of christian religion should be popish, than Turkish or heathenish? Hooker.

To-morrow next
We will for Ireland; and 'tis time, I trow. Shaksp.
O rueful day! rueful indeed, I trow. Gay.

2. To believe,
Lend less than thou owest,
Lovers more than thou trowst. Shakespeare.

TROW. interject. [for I trow, or trow you.]
An exclamation of inquiry.

Well, if you be not turn'd Turk, there is no more saying by the trow.

—What means the fool, trow? Shakespeare.

TROWEL. n. f. [truelle, Fr. trulla, Lat.]

1. A trowel is a tool to take up the mortar with, and spread it on the bricks; with which also they cut the bricks to such lengths as they have occasion, and also stop the joints. Moxon.

This was dextrous at his trowel,
That was bred to kill a cow with. Swift.

2. It is used for any coarse instrument.

How shall I answer you?

—As wit and fortune will,

—Or as the deity's decree.

—Well said, that was laid on with a trowel. Shakespeare.

The most accurate engravings or embossments seem such rude, bungling, deformed works, as if they had been done with a mallet, or a trowel. Wilkins.

TROY-WIGHT. } n. f. [from troies, Fr.]
TROY. } A kind of weight by which gold and bread are weighed, consisting of these denominations: a pound = 12 ounces; ounce = 20 pennyweights; pennyweight = 24 grains.

The English physicians make use of troy-weight after the following manner:

Grains	20	Scruple	60	3	Drachm	480	24	8	Ounce	5760	288	96	12	Pound
--------	----	---------	----	---	--------	-----	----	---	-------	------	-----	----	----	-------

The Romans left their ounce in Britain, now our averdupois ounce, for our troy ounce we had elsewhere. Arbutnot.

TRU'ANT. n. f. [truand, old Fr. treuwant, Dutch, a vagabond.] An idler; one who wanders idly about, neglecting his duty or employment. To play the truant is, in schools, to stay from school without leave.

For my part, I may speak it to my shame, I have a truant been to chivalry. Shakespeare.

Though my self have been an idle truant,
Omitting the sweet benefit of time,
To clothe mine age with angel like perfection;
Yet hath Sir Proteus made fair advantage of his days. Shakespeare.

Providence would only initiate mankind into the knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers and truants. More.

Our ships are laden with the Trojan store,
And you like truants come too late ashore. Duden.

TRU'ANT. adj. Idle; wandering from business; lazy; loitering.

What keeps you from Wertemberg?

—A truant disposition, good my lord. Shakespeare.

He made a blushing cut of himkiss,
And clad his truant youth with such a grace,
As if he master'd there a double spirit,
Of teaching, and of learning instantly. Shakespeare.

Where thou feed'st a single sheep remain
In shades aloof, or couch'd upon the plain,
Or late to lag behind with truant pace,
Revenge the crime. Dryden.

TO TRU'ANT. v. n. [truander, to beg about a country, French; truanten, old German.] To idle at a distance from duty; to loiter; to be lazy.

'Tis double wrong to truant with your bed,
And let her read it in thy looks at board. Shaksp.

TRU'ANTSHP. n. f. [truallé, old French; from truant; truandise in Chaucer is beggary.] Idleness; negligence; neglect of study or business.

The master should not chide with him if the child have done his diligence, and used no truantship. Ascham.

TRUB. n. f. [tuber, Latin.] A sort of herb. Answorth.

TRU'BTAIL. n. f. A short squat woman. Answorth.

TRUCE. n. f. [truga, low Latin; tregua, Italian; truce, old French.]

1. A temporary peace; a cessation of hostilities.

Leagues and truces made between superstitious persons, and such as serve God aright. Hooker.

They pray in vain to have sin pardoned, which seek not also to prevent sin by prayer, even every particular sin, by prayer against all sin, except men can name some transgression wherewith we ought to have truce. Hooker.

All this utter'd
With gentle breath, calm look, knees humbly bent,
Could not make truce with the unruly spleen
Of Tybal, deaf to peace. Shakespeare.

This token serveth for a flag of truce
Betwixt ourselves, and all our followers. Shaksp.
Men shall be lovers of their own selves, without natural affection, truce breakers. St. Timothy.

TRU

Left the truce with treason should be mixt.

'Tis my concern to have the tree betwixt. Dryden.

Shadwell till death true dulness would maintain;
And in his father's right, and realm's defence,
Ne'er would have peace with wit, nor truce with sense. Dryden.

2. Cessation; intermission; short quiet.

There he may find

Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain

The irksome hour. Milton.

Sickness, which in the latter years of his life

gave him but short and seldom truce. Fell.

TRUCIDATION. n. f. [from trucido, Lat.]

The act of killing.

TO TRUCK. v. n. [troquer, French; truccare, Italian; trocar, Spanish; deduced by Salmasius from τρώγω, to get money.] To traffick by exchange; to give one commodity for another.

TO TRUCK. v. a. To give in exchange; to exchange.

The Indians truck gold for glasses. L'Estrange.

Go, miser! go; for turn sell thy soul,

Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole;

That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,

See, what a vast estate he left his son! Dryden.

I see nothing left us, but to truck and barter our goods, like the wild Indians, with each other. Smyth.

TRUCK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Exchange; traffick by exchange.

It is no less requisite to maintain a truck in moral offices, than in the common business of commerce. L'Estrange.

Love is covetous; I must have all of you; I heart for heart is an equal truck. Dryden.

2. [τροχός.] Wooden wheels for carriage of cannon. Answorth.

TO TRUCKLE. v. n. [This word is, I believe, derived from trucklebed, which is always under another bed.] To be in a state of subjection or inferiority; to yield; to creep.

Shall our nation be in bondage thus Unto a hind that truckles under us? Chambers d.

For which to many a legal engold
Has been run down in courts, and truckled. Hudibras.

Men may be stiff and obstinate upon a wrong ground, and ply and truckle too upon as false a foundation. L'Estrange.

Religion itself is forced to truckle to worldly policy. North.

His zeal was not to lath our crimes,
But discontent against the times.

For had we made him truly ours,

To raise his post or fill his coffers,

Perhaps he might have truckled down,

Like other brethren of his gown. Swift.

They were subdued and ruled by Alexander's captains, and continued under several revolutions a small trucking state, of no name till they fell under the Romans. Swift.

TRUCKLEBED, or Trundlebed. n. f. [properly trucklebed; from truckle, Latin, or τροχός.] A bed that runs on wheels under a higher bed.

There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing bed and trucklebed. Shakespeare.

If he that is in battle slum

Be in the bed of honour lain;

He that is beaten may be laid

To lie in honour's trucklebed. Hudibras.

TRUCULENCE. n. f. [truculentia, Latin.]

1. Savageness of manners.

2. Terribleness of aspect.

TRUCULENT. adj. [truculentus, Latin.]

1. Savage; barbarous.

A barbarous Scythia, where the savage and truculent inhabitants transfer themselves from place to place in waggons, as they can find pasture, and live upon milk, and flesh roasted in the sun on the pannels of their saddles. Ray.

TRU

2. Terrible of aspect.
3. Destructive; cruel.
Pestilential feminaries, according to their grossness of subtilty, cause more or less truculent plagues, some of such malignity, that they evacuate in two hours. Harvey.
TO TRUDGE. v. n. [truggolare, Italian.]
To travel laboriously; to jog on; to march heavily on.
No man is secure, but night-walking heralds,
That trudge between the king and mistress Shore. Shakespeare.
No sooner was he fit to trudge,
But both made ready to dislodge. Hudibras.
Away they trudged together, and about midnight got to their journey's end. L'Estrange.
Once a poor rogue, 'tis true, I trod the street,
And trudged to Rome upon my naked feet:
Gold is the greatest god. Dryden.
He that will know the truth must leave the beaten track, which none but servile minds trudge continually in. Locke.
TRUE. adj. [ετυοπα, τυυπα, Saxon.]
1. Not false; not erroneous; agreeing with fact, or with the nature of things.
Of those he chose the falsest two,
And stult for to forge true seeming lies. Spenser.
Teeth hadst thou in thy head when thou wast born;
And, if the rest be true which I have heard,
Thou canst not into the world with thy legs forward. Shakespeare.
Mesperian fables true,
If true, here only. Milton.
What you said had not been true,
If spoke by any else but you. Cowley.
2. Not false; agreeing with our own thoughts.
3. Pure from the crime of falsehood; veracious.
A true witness delivereth souls. Proverbs.
4. Genuine; real; not counterfeit.
The darkness is past, and the true light now Sheth. 1 John.
Among unequals what society
Can sort? What harmony or true delight? Milton.
Unbind the charms that in slight fables lie,
And teach that truth is truest poetry. Cowley.
Religion, as it is the most valuable thing in the world, so it gives the truest value to them who promote the practice of it by their example and authority. Atterbury.
5. Faithful; not perfidious; steady.
My revenge is now at Milford, would I had wings to follow it! come and be true. Shakespeare.
So young, and so untender?
—So young, my lord, and true.
—Let it be so; thy truth then be thy dower. Shakespeare.
Do not see
My fair rose wither; yet look up; behold,
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with true love tears. Shakespeare.
I'll rather die
Deserted, than oblige thee with a fact Perficious to thy peace, chiefly assur'd
Remarkably so late of thy so true,
So faithful, love unequal'd. Milton.
The first great work
Is, that yourself may to yourself be true. Roscom.
When this fire is kindled, both sides inflame it;
All regard of merit is lost in persons employed, and these only choose that are true to the party. Temple.
Smil'd Venus, to behold her own true knight Obtain the conquest, though he lost the fight. Dryden.
True to the king her principles are found;
Oh! that her practice were but half so sound!
Steadfast in various turns of state the stood,
And seal'd her vow'd affection with her blood. Dryden.
The trust hearts for Voiture heav'd with sighs;
Voiture was wept by all the bright eyes. Pope.
True to his charge, the bard preserv'd her long
In honour's limits; such the pow'r of song. Pope.
6. Honest; not fraudulent.

TRU

- The thieves have bound the true men: now could thou and I rob the thieves, and go merrily to London, it would be arguable for a week. Shakspeare.
If king Edward be as true and just,
As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
This day should Clarence closely be mow'd up. Shakspeare.
7. Exact; conformable to a rule.
If all those great painters, who have left us such fair platitudes, had rigorously observed it, they had made things more regularly true, but withal very unpleasing. Dryden.
He drew
A circle regularly true. Prior.
Tickel's first book does not want its merit; but I was disappointed in my expectation of a translation nicely true to the original; whereas in those parts where the greatest exactness seems to be demanded, he has been the least careful. Arbutnot.
8. Rightful.
They seize the sceptre;
Then lose it to a stranger, that the true
Anointed King Messiah might be born Barr'd of his right. Milton.
TRUEBORN. adj. [true and born.] Having a right by birth to any title.
Where'er I wander, boast of this I can,
Though banish'd, yet a trueborn Englishman. Shakspeare.
Let him that is a trueborn gentleman,
And stands upon the honour of his birth,
From off this briar pluck a white rose with me. Shakspeare.
TRUEBRE'D. adj. [true and bred.] Of a right breed.
Two of them I know to be as truebred cowards
as ever turned back. Shakspeare.
Baudle do you call him? he's a substantial true-bred beast, bravely forward. Dryden.
TRUEHEARTED. adj. [true and heart.]
Honest; faithful.
I have known no honest or truehearted man:
fare thee well. Shakspeare.
TRUELOVE. n. f. An herb.
TRUELOVEKNOT. n. f. [true, love, and TRUELOVEKNOT. n. f. [knol.] Lines drawn through each other with many involu-tions, considered as the emblem of interwoven affection.
I'll carve your name on barks of trees
With true love knots, and flourishes,
That shall misse eternal spring. Hudibras.
TRUENESS. n. f. [from true.] Sincerity; faithfulness.
The even carriage between two factions proceedeth not always of moderation, but of a true-ness to a man's self, with end to make use of both. Bacon.
TRUEPENNY. n. f. [true and penny.] A familiar phrase for an honest fellow.
Say'st thou so? art thou there, truepenny?
Come on. Shakspeare.
TRUEFFLE. n. f. [truffe, truffe, French.]
In Italy, the usual method for the finding of truffles, or subterraneous mushrooms, called by the Italians truffoli, and in Latin tubera terra, is by tying a cord to the hind leg of a pig, and driving him, observing where he begins to root. Ray.
TRUG. n. f. A hod for mortar.
TRULL. n. f. [trulla, Italian.]
1. A low whore; a vagrant trumpeter.
I'm sure I fear'd the dauphin and his trull. Shakspeare.
A trull who fits
By the town wall, and for her living knits. Dryden.
So Mævius, when he drum'd his skull,
To celebrate some suburb trull;
His similes in order set,
And ev'ry crambo he cou'd get;
Before he could his poem close,
The lovely nymph had lost her nose. Swift.
2. It seems to have had first at least a neutral sense: a girl; a lass; a wench.
Among the rest of all the route,
A passing proper lass,
A white-haired trull, of twenty years,
Or more about there was:

TRU

- In stature passing all the rest,
A gallant girl for bewes;
To be compar'd with townish nymphs,
So fair she was to view. Turberville.
TRULY. adv. [from true.]
1. According to truth; not falsely; faithfully; honestly.
They thought they might do it, not only lingly, because they loved him; and truly, because such indeed was the mind of the people; but safely, because she who ruled the king was agreed thereto. Shakspeare.
No untruth can avail the patron long; for the most truly are most behovefully spoken. Hudibras.
2. Really; without fallacy.
Wisdom alone is truly fair. Milton.
Such as are efficaciously called, justified, and sanctified, while they live, are truly holy, and when they die, are perfectly holy. Payne.
3. Exactly; justly.
Right reason is nothing else but the mind of man judging of things truly, and as they are in themselves. Locke.
4. Indeed: a slight affirmation, almost ex-pletive.
I have not undertaken it out of any vain pleasure in mine own pen; nor truly without pondering with myself beforehand what censure I might incur. Hudibras.
TRUMP. n. f. [trompe, Dutch, and trump,
French; tromba, Italian.]
1. A trumpet; an instrument of warlike music.
Whilst any trump did sound, or drum struck,
His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field. Shakspeare.
Yet first to those ychain'd in sleep,
The wakeful trump of doom must thunder thro'
the deep. Milton.
I heard
The neighing couriers and the soldiers cry,
And sounding trumpets that seem'd to tear the air. Dryden.
Beneath this tomb an infant lies,
To earth whose body lent,
Hereafter shall more glorious rise,
But not more innocent.
When the archangel's trump shall blow,
And souls to bodies join,
What crowds shall with their lives below
Had been as short as thine! Shakspeare.
2. [corrupted from triumph. Latimer.] A Christmas sermon, exhibited a game at cards, and made the ace of hearts trump.
[For.] A winning card; a card that has particular privileges in a game.
Him Busto follow'd, but his fate more hard,
Gain'd but one trump and one plebeian card. Pope.
Now her heart with pleasure jumps,
She scarce remembers what is trump. Shakspeare.
3. To put to or upon the TRUMPS. To put to the last expedient.
We are now put upon our last trump; the fort earthed, but I shall send my two turners in after him. Dryden.
TO TRUMP. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To win with a trump card.
2. To TRUMP up. [from tromper, French;
to cheat.] To devise; to forge.
TRUMPERY. n. f. [tromperie, French, a cheat.]
1. Something fallaciously splendid; something of less value than it seems.
The trumpery in my house bring hither,
For state to catch these thieves. Shakspeare.
2. Falsehood; empty talk.
Breaking into parts the story of the creation, and delivering it over in a mystical sense, wrapping it up mixed with other their own trumpery, they have sought to obscure the truth thereof. Haigh.
3. Something of no value; trifles.
Embrios and idiots, eremits and fools,
White, black, and grey, with all their trumpery. Milton.

Another cavity of the head, was stuffed with billet-doux, pricked dances, and other trumpety of the same nature. Addison.

TRUMPET. n. f. [trompette, French and Dutch.]

1. An instrument of martial musick sounded by the breath.

What's the business,
That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the house? Shakespeare.

If any man of quality will maintain upon Edmund Earl of Gloster, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear by the third sound of the trumpet. Shakespeare.

As dispers'd souldiers, at the trumpet's call,
Haste to their colours all. Cowley.

He blew
His trumpet, heard in Ork, since perhaps
When God defended, and perhaps once more
To sound at general doom. Th' angelick blast Filled all the regions. Milton.

The last loud trumpet's wondrous sound
Shall through the rending tombs rebound.
And wake the nations under ground. Holcomen.

Things of deep sense we may in prose unfold,
But they move more in lofty numbers told;
By the loud trumpet which our courage aids,
We learn that sound, as well as sense, persuade. Waller.

The trumpet's loud clangor
Excites us to arms,
With shrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms. Dryden.

Every man is the maker of his own fortune, and must be in some measure the trumpet of his fame. Tatler.

Let the loud trumpet sound,
Till the roofs all around
The still echoes rebound. Pope.

2. In military style, a trumpeter.
He wisely desired, that a trumpet might be first sent for a pair. Clarendon.

Among our forefathers, the enemy, when there was a king in the field, demanded by a trumpet in what part he resided, that they might avoid firing upon the royal pavilion. Addison.

3. One who celebrates; one who praises.
Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him return in envy. Bacon.

That great politician was pleased to have the greatest wit of those times in his interests, and to be the trumpet of his praises. Dryden.

TO TRUMPET. v. a. [trompetter, French;
from the noun.] To publish by sound of trumpet; to proclaim.

That I did love the Moor to live with him,
My downright violence to form my fortunes
May trumpet to the world. Shakespeare.

Why so tart a savour
To trumpet such good tidings! Shakespeare.
They went with sound of trumpet; for they did nothing but publish and trumpet all the reproaches they could devise against the Irish. Bacon.

TRUMPETER. n. f. [from trumpet.]
1. One who sounds a trumpet.

Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear,
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines. Shaksp.
As they returned, a herald and trumpeter from the Scots overtook them. Hayward.

Their men lie securely intrench'd in a cloud,
And a trumpet hornet to battle sounds loud. Dryden.

An army of trumpeters would give as great a strength as this confederacy of tongue warriors, who, like those military musicians, content themselves with animating their friends to battle. Addison.

2. One who proclaims, publishes, or denounces.

Where there is an opinion to be credited of virtue or greatness, these men are good trumpeters. Bacon.
How came so many thousands to fight, and die in the same rebellion? why were they deceived into it by those spiritual trumpeters, who followed them with continual alarms of damnation if they did not venture life, fortune, and all, in that which those impostors called the cause of God? South.

3. [scolopex.] A fish. Ainsworth.

TRUMPET-FLOWER. n. f. [bignonia.] A tubulous flower. Miller.

TRUMPET-TONGUED. adj. [trumpet and tongue.] Having tongues vociferous as a trumpet.

This Duncan's virtues
Will plead, like angels, trumpet-tongued, against The deep damnation of his taking off. Shakespeare.

TRUMPET-LIKE. adj. Resembling a trumpet.

A breast of brass, a voice Infractions and trumpetlike. Chapman.

TO TRUNCATE. t. a. [truncus, Latin.] To maim; to lop; to cut short.

TRUNCATION. n. f. [from truncate.] The act of lopping or maiming.

TRUNCHEON. n. f. [tronçon, French.]

1. A short staff; a club; a cudgel.

With his truncheon he so rudely stroke
Cymochles twice, that twice him forc'd his foot revoke. Spenser.

Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser;
Thy hand is but a finger to my fist;
Thy leg is a stick compared with this truncheon. Shakespeare.

The English flew divers of them with plumets offhead tied to a truncheon or staff by a cord. Hayward.

One with a broken truncheon deals his blows. Dryden.

2. A staff of command.

The hand of Mars
Beckon'd with fiery truncheon my retire. Shakespeare.

No ceremony that to great ones 'longs,
The martial's truncheon, nor the judge's robe,
Become them with one half so good a grace,
As mercy does. Shakespeare.

TO TRUNCHEON. v. a. [from the noun.]
To beat with a truncheon.

Captain! thou abominable cheater! If captains were of my mind, they would truncheon you out of taking their names upon you before you earned them. Shakespeare.

TRUNCHEONIER. n. f. [from truncheon.]
One armed with a truncheon.

I mist the meteor once, and hit that woman, who cried out, Chubs! when I might see from far some tory truncheoniers draw to her succour. Shakespeare.

TO TRUNDLE. v. n. [trondeler, Picard French; trunbl, a boul, Saxon.] To roll; to bowl along.

In the four last it is heaved up by several spon-ders intermixed with proper breathing places, and I at last trundles down in a continued line of dactyls. Addison.

TRUNDLE. n. f. [trunbl, Saxon.] Any round rolling thing.

TRUNDLE-TAIL. n. f. Round tail.

Avast, you curs!
Hound or spaniel, brace or lynx,
Or bobtail tike, or trundle-tail. Shakespeare.

TRUNK. n. f. [truncus, Latin; trunc, Fr.]

1. The body of a tree.

He was
The ivy, which had hid my princely trunk,
And suckt my verdure out on't. Shakespeare.

About the mossy trunk I wound me torn,
For high from ground the branch's would require Thy utmost reach. Milton.

Creeping 'twixt 'em all, the manning vine
Does round their trunks her purple clusters twine. Dryden.

Some of the largest trees have seeds no bigger than some diminutive plants, and yet every seed is a perfect plant, with a true branch, and leaves, included in a shell. Bentley.

2. The body without the limbs of an animal.

The charm and venom which they drank
Their blood with ferret filth infected had,
Being infused through the senseless trunk. Spenser.

Thou bring'st me happiness and peace, son John;
But health, black, with youthful wings is flown
From this bare, wither'd trunk. Shakespeare.

3. The main body of any thing.

The large trunks of the veins discharge the re-sistent blood into the next adjacent trunk, and so on to the heart. Ray.

4. [trunc, French.] A chest for clothes;
sometimes a small chest commonly lined with paper.

Neither press, coffer, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places. Shakespeare.

Some odd fantastick lord would fain
Carry in trunks, and all my drudgery do. Dryden.

Where a young man learned to dance, there happened to stand an old trunk in the room; the idea of which had to mixed itself with the turns of all his dances, that, though he could dance excellently well, yet it was only whilst that trunk was there;
nor could he perform well in any other place, unless that, or some such other trunk, had its due position in the room. Locke.

Your poem sunk,
And sent in quires to line a trunk;
If still you be dispos'd to rhyme,
Go try your hand a second time. Swift.

5. The proboscis of an elephant, or other animal.

Leviathan that at his gills
Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea. Milton.

When elephant gault elephant did rear
His trunk, and cables jostled in the air,
My sword thy way to victory had shown. Dryden.

6. A long tube through which pellets of clay are blown.

In rolls of parchment trunks, the mouth being lead to the one end, and the ear to the other, the sound is heard much farther than in the open air. Bacon.

In a shooting trunk, the longer it is to a certain limit, the swifter and more forcibly the air drives the pellet. Ray.

TO TRUNK. v. a. [truncus, Latin.] To truncate; to maim; to lop. Obsolete.

Large streams of blood out of the trunked flock
Forth gushed, like water streams from riven rock. Spenser.

TRUNKED. adj. [from trunk.] Having a trunk.

She is thick set with strong and well truncked trees. Howell.

TRUNK-HOSE. n. f. [trunk and hose.]
Large breeches formerly worn.

The short trunk-hose shall show thy foot and knee
Licentious, and to common eye-light free,
And with a bolder trade, and looser air,
Mingled with men, a man thou must appear. Prior.

TRUNKIONS. n. f. [trognons, French.]
The knobs or branchings of a gun, that bear it on the cheeks of a carriage. Bailey.

TRUSTION. n. f. [trudo, Latin.] The act of thrusting or pushing.

By attraction we do not understand drawing, pumping, sucking, which is really pulsion and traction. Bentley.

TRUSS. n. f. [trouffe, French.]

1. A bandage by which ruptures are restrained from lapsing.

A hernia would turn ead, and the patient be put to the trouble of wearing a truss. Wiffman.

2. Bundle; any thing thrust close together.

All as a poor pedler he did wend,
Bearing a truss of wiles at his back,
As belles and babies, and glasses in his pack. Spenser.

The rebels first won the plain at the hill's foot by assault, and then the even ground on the top, by carrying up great trusses of hay before them, to dead their shot. Carew.

TRU

An old was wishing for a mouthful of fresh grass to keep upon, in exchange for a heartless trust of straw.

The fair one devoured a trust of sallet, and drank a full bottle to her share.

3. Trouse; breeches. Obsolete.

To TRUSS. v. a. [trousser, French.] To pack up close together.

What in most English writers useth to be loose and untight, in this author is well grounded, snugly framed, and strongly trusted up together.

TWINBORN. adj. [twin and born.] Born at the same birth.

Our sin lay on the king; he must bear all.
O hard condition, and twinborn with greatness!

To TWINE. v. a. [epinan, Saxon; twynan, Dutch.]

1. To twist or complicate so as to unite, or form one body or substance out of two or more.

Thou shalt make an hanging of blue, and fine
twined linen, wrought with needlework. Exodus.

2. I know not whether this is from twine or twain.

By original lapse, true liberty
Is lost, which always with right reason dwells,
Twine'd, and from her hath no dividual being. Milton.

3. To unite itself.

Lumps of sugar lose themselves, and twine
Their subtle essence with the soul of wine. Grayhaw.

To TWINE. v. n.

1. To convolve itself; to wrap itself closely about.

Let wreathes of triumph now my temples twine
The victor crown; the glorious prize is mine! Pope.

2. To unite by interposition of parts.

Friends now fast sworn, who twine in love
Unseparable, shall, within this hour,
On a dissolution of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakespeare.

3. To wind; to make flexures.

As rivers, though they bend and twine,
Still to the sea their course incline:
Or as philosophers, who find
Some favorite system to their mind,
In every point to make it fit,
Will force all nature to submit.
The deer rushes through the twining brake. Swift.

4. To turn round.

O friends!
Some one abides within here, that commends
The place to us, and breathes a voice divine:
As the some web wrought, or her spindles twine,
She cherishes with her song. Chapman.

TWINE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A twisted thread.

Not any damsel, which her vanities most
In skillful knitting of soft filken twine. Spenser.
A pointed sword hung threatening o'er his head,
Sustain'd but by a slender twine of thread. Dryden.

2. Twist; convolution.

Nor all the gods beside Longer dare abide,
Not Typhon huge ending in snaky twine. Milton.
Welcome joy and feast,
Dread your locks with rosy twine,
Dropping tears, dropping wine. Milton.

3. Embrace; act of convolving itself round.

Everlasting hate
The vine to ivy bears, but with am'rous twine
Clasps the tall elm. Philips.

To TWINGE. v. a. [twingen, Gerin. twinge, Danish.]

1. To torment with sudden and short pain.

The goat charged into the nostrils of the lion, and there twinged him till he made him rear himself, and so mangled him. L'Estrange.

2. To pinch; to tweak.

When a man is past his sense,
There's no way to reduce him thence,
But twinging him by th' ears and nose,
Or laying on of heavy blows. Hudibras.

TWINGE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Short sudden sharp pain.

The twinge of this old villain startles me,
and twinge for my own sin, though far from of him. Dryden.

2. A tweak; a pinch.

How can you fawn upon a master that gives you so many blows and twinges by the ears? L'Estrange.

TWINK. n. f. [See TWINKLE.] The motion of an eye; a moment. Not in use.

She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss
She vied to fast, protelling oath on oath.
That in a twink she won me to her love. Shakespeare.

To TWINKLE. v. n. [twincelian, Saxon.]

1. To sparkle; to flash irregularly; to shine with intermitted light; to shine faintly; to quiver.

At first I did adore a twinkling star,
But now I worship a celestial twink. Shakespeare.
As plays the fun upon the twink stream,
Twinkling another counterfeit beam.
So seems this gorgeous beauty. Shakespeare.
Some their forked tails stretch forth on high,
And tear the twinkling stars from trembling sky. Fairfax.

God comprises all the good we value in the creatures, as the twinkling light that twinkles in the stars. Boyle.

The star of love,
That twinkles you to fair Almeyda's bed. Dryden.

Think you your French proselytes are come
To starve abroad, because they starv'd at home?
Your benefices twinkled from afar. Dryden.

So weak your charms, that, like a winter's night
Twinkling with stars, they freeze me while they light. Dryden.

These stars do not twinkle when viewed through telescopes which have large apertures; for the rays
of light which pass through divers parts of the aperture, tremble each of them apart; and by means of their various, and sometimes contrary tremors, fall at one and the same time upon different points in the bottom of the eye. Newton.

2. To open and shut the eye by turns.

The owl fell a moping and twinkling. L'Estrange.

3. To play irregularly.

His eyes will twinkle, and his tongue will roll,
As though he beckon'd and call'd back his soul. Donne.

TWINKLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

TWINKLING. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A sparkling intermitting light.

2. A motion of the eye.

Suddenly, with a twinkle of her eye,
The damsel broke his misintended dart. Spenser.
I come, I come; the least twinkle had brought me to thee. Dryden.

3. A short space, such as is taken up by a motion of the eye.

Money can thy wants at will supply:
Shields, steeds, and arms, and all things for thee meet.

It can pourvey in twinkling of an eye. Spenser.
These false beauties of the stage are no more lasting than a rainbow; when the actor quits them no longer with his reflection, they vanish in a twinkling. Dryden.

The action, passion, and manners of so many persons in a picture, are to be discerned in the twinkling of an eye, if the sight could take in ever so many different objects all at once. Dryden.

TWINKLING. n. f. [diminutive of twine.] A twin lamb; a lamb of two brought at a birth.

Twinklings increase bring. Tupper.

TWINNER. n. f. [from twin.] A breeder of twins.

Ewes yearly by twinning rich masters do make,
The lambs of such twinnings for breeders go take. Tupper.

To TWIRL. v. a. [from whirl.] To turn round; to move by a quick rotation.

Wool and raw silk by moisture incorporate with other thread; especially if there be a little twirling, as appears by the twirling and twirling
about of spindles. Bacon.

Dextrous dancings of the twirling mop. Gay.

See Suddy made.

Some taught with dextrous hand to twirl the wheel. Dodley.

To TWIRL. v. n. To revolve with a quick motion.

TWIRL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Rotation; circular motion.

2. Twist; convolution.

The twirl on this is different from that of the others; this being an heterostrophia, the twirl be-

To TWIST. v. a. [twyrtan, Sax. twisten, Dutch.]

1. To form by complication; to form by convolution.

Do but despair,
And if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twisted from her womb
Will strangle thee. Shakespeare.

To reprove discontent, the ancients feigned, that in hell stood a man twisting a rope of hay; and fillets twisted on, suffering an ass to eat up all the was finished. Taylor.

Would Clotho wash her hands in milk,
And twist our thread with gold and silk;
Would she in friendship, peace, and plenty,
Spin out our years to four times twenty;
And should we both in this condition
Have conquer'd love, and worse ambition;
Else these two passions by the way
May chance to shew us scurvy play. Pope.

The task were harder to secure my own
Against the power of those already known;
For well you twist the secret chains that bind
With gentle force the captivated mind. Lytelton.

2. To contort; to writhe.

Either double it into a pyramical, or twist it into a serpentine form. Pope.

3. To wreath; to wind; to encircle by something round about.

There are pillars of smoke twisted about with wreaths of flame. Burnet.

4. To form; to weave.

If thou dost love fair Hero, cherish it,
And thou shalt have her: 'twas 't not to this end
That thou begat'st twist to fine a story? Shakespeare.

5. To unite by intertexture of parts.

All know how prodigal
Of thy great foul thou art, longing to twist
Bays with that ivy which so early left Thy youthful temples. Waller.

6. To unite; to inuinate.

When avarice twists itself, not only with the practices of men, but the doctrines of the church, when ecclesiasticks dispute for money, the march seems fatal. Decay of Piety.

To TWIST. v. n. To be contorted; to be convolved.

In an ileus, commonly called the twisting of the guts, is a convolution or inflection of one part of the gut within the other. Arbuthnot.

Deep in her breast he plung'd the shining sword.
The twisting view the slain with vast surprise,
Her twisting volumes, and her rolling eyes. Pope.

TWIST. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing made by convolution, or winding two bodies together.

Minerva nur'd him
Within a twist of twining-osses laid. Addison.

2. A single string of a cord.

Winding a thin string about the work hazards breaking, by the twisting of the several twists against one another. Mason.

3. A cord; a string.

Through these labyrinths, not my grov'ling soul
But thy silk twist, let down from heav'n to me,
Did both conduct and teach me, how by it
To climb to thee. Herbert.

About his chin the twist
He ty'd, and soon the strangled soul dismiss'd. Dryden.

4. Contortion; writhe.

Not the least turn or twist in the fibres of any animal, which does not render them more proper for that particular animal's way of life than of other texture. Addison.

5. The manner of twisting.

Jack twist at first sight of it; he found fault with the length, the thickness, and the twist. Archbishop.

TWISTED. n. f. [from twist.]

1. One who twists; a twister.

2. The instrument of twisting. To this word I have annexed some remarkable lines, which explain twist in all its senses.When a twister a-twisting will twist him a twist,
For the twisting of his twist he three twines doth intwine;But if one of the twines of the twist do untwist,
The twine that untwisteth untwisteth the twist.
Untwisting the twine that untwisteth between,
He twists with his twister the two in a twine;
Then twice having twisted the twines of the twine,
He twisteth the twine he had twined in twain.
The twain that in twining before in the twine,
As twine were intwined, he now doth untwine.
Twist the twain intwining a twist more between,
He, twisting his twister, makes a twist of the twine.
Wubbin.To TWIT. v. a. [ebutan, Saxon.] To sneer; to flout; to reproach.When approaching the stormy showers
We mought with our flounders bear off the sharp showers,And sooth to shine, nought seemeth like strife,

The form of life would be but wild despair!
A tymbal's sound were better than my voice,
My faith were form, my eloquence were noise. *Prior.TYMPANITES. n. f. [τυμπανίτης.] That particular sort of dropsy that swells the belly up like a drum, and is often cured by tapping.TYMPANUM. n. f. A drum; a part of the ear, so called from its resemblance to a drum.The three little bones in mentu auditorio, by firming the tympanum, do a great help to the hearing. *Wismen.TYMPANY. n. f. [from tympanum, Lat.] A kind of obtruded statulence that swells the body like a drum; the wind dropsy.Hope, the christian grace, must be proportioned and attenuated to the promise; if it exceed that temper and proportion, it becomes a tumour and tympany of hope. *Hammond.*He does not shew us Rome great suddenly,
As if the empire were a tympany;
But gives it natural growth, tells how and why
The little body grew so large and high. *Suckling.*Others that affect A lofty stile, swell to a tympany. Roscommon.
Pride is no more than an unnatural tympany, that rises in a bubble, and spends itself in a blast. *L'Estrange.*Nor let thy mountain-belly make pretence
Of likeness; thine's a tympany of sense.
A ton of man in thy large bulk is writ,
But sure thou'rt but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.
The air is so rarified in this kind of dropsical tumour, as makes it hard and tight like a drum, and from thence it is called a tympany. *Arbushnot.TYNY. adj. Small.He that has a little tiny wit,
Must make content with his fortunes fit. *Shakspeare.TYPE. n. f. [type, French; typus, Latin; τύπος.]

One yet not master of his art; one in his rudiments.

There stands a structure on a rising hill,
Where tyros take their freedom out to kill. Gold.

V.

V A C

V Has two powers, expressed in modern English by two characters, v consonant and a vowel, which ought to be considered as two letters; but as they were long confounded while the two uses were annexed to one form, the old custom still continues to be followed.

U, the vowel, has two sounds; one clear, expressed at other times by eu, as obuse; the other close, and approaching to the Italian u, or English oo, as obtund.

V, the consonant, has a sound nearly approaching to those of b and f. With b it is by the Spaniards and Gascons always confounded, and in the Runick alphabet is expressed by the same character with f, distinguished only by a diacritical point. Its sound in English is uniform. It is never mute.

VACANCY. n. f. [from vacant.]

1. Empty space; vacuity.

How is't,

That thus you bend your eye on vacancy,
And with th' incorporal air do hold discourse? Shak.

2. Chasm; space unfilled.

The reader finds a wide vacancy, and knows not how to transport his thoughts to the next particular, for want of some connecting idea. Watts.

3. [vacance, Fr.] State of a post or employment when it is unsupplied.

They were content to bribe them with the nomination of some bishops, and disposal of the revenues of some churches during the vacancies. Leffey.

In the vacancy of a bishop, the guardian of the spiritualities was summoned to parliament in the bishop's room. Ayliffe.

4. [vacances, Fr.] Time of leisure; relaxation; intermission; time unengaged.

If, sometimes, each other's eyes we meet,
Those little vacancies from toil are sweet. Dryden.

The daily intervals of time and vacancies from necessary labour, together with the one day in seven in the christian world, allow sufficient time. Watts.

5. Idleness; emptiness of thought.

When alone, or in company, they sit still without doing any thing, I like it worse; for all dispositions to idleness or vacancy, even before they are habits, are dangerous. Watson.

VACANT. adj. [vacant, Fr. vacans, Lat.]

1. Empty; unfilled; void.

Why should the air so impetuously rush into the cavity of the receiver, if there were before no vacant room to receive it? Poyle.

A better race to bring into their vacant room. Milton.

2. Free; unencumbered; uncrowded.

Religion is the interest of all; but philosophy of taste only that are at leisure, and vacant from the cares of the world. Mor.

A very little part of our life is so vacant from business, as to leave us free to the attraction of temperate good. Locke.

3. Not filled by an incumbent, or possessor.

Let the fiend invade vacant possession. Milton.
Others, when they allowed the throne vacant, thought the succession should immediately go to the next heir. Swift.

4. Being at leisure; disengaged.

They which have the government, scatter the army abroad, and place them in villages to take their victuals of them, at such vacant times as they lie not in camp. Spenser.

Sir John Beikley was the more vacant for that service, by the reduction of Barnstable. Clarendon.

Besides those portions of time which the necessities of nature and of civil life extorted from him, there was not a minute of the day which he left vacant. Fell.

The memory relieves the mind in her vacant moments, and prevents any chaos of thought, by ideas of what is past. Addison.

5. Thoughtless; empty of thought; not busy.

The wretched slave,
Who with a body fill'd, and vacant mind,
Gets him to rest, cramp'd with distasteful bread. Shakespeare.

The duke had a pleasant and vacant face, proceeding from a singular assurance in his temper. Watson.

To VACATE. v. a. [vacare, Lat.]

1. To annul; to make void; to make of no authority.

That after-act vacating the authority of the precedent, tells the world that some remote touched even Stratford's most implacable enemies. King Charles.

The necessity of observing the Jewish sabbath was vacated by the apostolical institution of the Lord's day. Nelson.

2. To make vacant; to quit possession of; as, he vacated the throne.

3. To desert; to put an end to.

He vacates my revenge;
For, while he trusts me, 'twere to buse a part
To town, and yet betray. Dryden.

VACATION. n. f. [vacation, Fr. vacatio, Lat.]

1. Intermision of juridical proceedings, or any other stated employment's; recess of courts or senates.

Vacation is all that time which passes between term and term, at London. Cowell.

As these clerks want not their full task of labour during the open term, so there is for them whereupon to be occupied in the vacation only. Bacon.

2. Leisure; freedom from trouble or perplexity.

Benefit of peace, quiet, and vacation for piety, have rendered it necessary, in every christian commonwealth, by laws to secure propriety. Hammond.

VACCARY. n. f. [vacca, Lat.] A cow-house; a cow-pasture. Bailey.

VACILLANCY. n. f. [vacillans, from vacillo, Latin; vacillant, Fr.] A state of wavering; fluctuation; inconsistency. Not much in use.

I deny that all mutability implies imperfection, though some does, as that vacillancy in human souls, and such mutations as are found in corporeal matter. Mor.

VACILLATION. n. f. [vacillatio, from vacillo, Lat. vacillation, Fr.] The act or state of reeling or staggering.

The muscles keep the body upright, and prevent its falling, by readily assisting against every vacillation. Dehaem.

VACUATION. n. f. [from vacuus, Latin.] The act of emptying. Duff.

VACUIST. n. f. [from vacuum.] A philosopher that holds a vacuum: opposed to a plenist.

Those spaces, which the vacuists would have to be empty, because they are manifestly devoid of air, the plenists do not prove replenished with subtle matter. Boyle.

VACUITY. n. f. [vacuitas, from vacuus, Lat. vacuit, Fr.]

1. Emptiness; state of being unfilled.

Hunger is such a state of vacuity, as to require a fresh supply of aliment. Arbutnot.

2. Space unfilled; space unoccupied.

In filling up vacancies, turning out shadows and ceremonies, by explicit prescription of substantial duties, which those shadows did obscurely represent. Hammond.

He, that feat soon failing, meets
A vast vacuity. Milton.

Body and space are quite different things, and a vacancy is interspersed among the particles of matter. Bentley.

God, who alone can answer all our longings, and fill every vacancy of our soul, should entirely possess our heart. Rogers.

Redeeming still at night these vacancies of the day. Fell.

3. Inanity; want of reality.

The soul is seen, like other things, in the mirror of its effects; but if they'll run behind the glass to catch at it, their expectations will meet with vacancy and emptiness. Glanville.

VACUOUS. adj. [vacuus, Lat. vacu, Fr.] Empty; unfilled.

Boundless the deep, because I AM who fill Infinitude: nor vacuum the space. Milton.

VACUUM. n. f. [Latin.] Space unoccupied by matter.

Our enquiries about vacuum, or space and atoms, will show us some good practical lessons. Watts.

TO VACUE. v. a. [vacuo, Lat.] To vanish; to pass away. Spenser. A word useful in poetry, but not received.

Be ever gloried here thy sovereign name,
That thou may'st smile on all which thou hast made;

Whose frown alone can shake this earthly frame,
And at whose touch the hills in smoke shall fade. Watson.

VAGABOND. adj. [vagabundus, low Lat. vagabund, Fr.]

1. Wandering without any settled habitation; wanting a home.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death;
Vagabond exile: yet I would not buy
Their no, y at the price of one fair word. Shak.
A vagabond debtor may be cited in whatever place or jurisdiction he is found. Ayliffe.

2. Wandering; vagrant.

This common body,
Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,
Goes to, and back, lacquering the varying tide. Shak.
Their prayers by ruinous winds Blown vagabond or frustrate. Milton.

VAGABOND. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A vagrant; a wanderer: commonly in a sense of reproach.

V A I

We call those people wanderers and vagabonds, that have no dwelling place. Raleigh.
Reduc'd, like Hannibal, to seek relief,
From court to court, and wander up and down
A vagabond in Afric. Addison.

2. One that wanders illegally, without a settled habitation.

Vagabond is a person without a home. Watts.
VAGA'BY. n. f. [from vagus, Lat.] A wild freak; a capricious frolic.

They chang'd their minds,
Flew off, and into strange vagaries fell,
As they would dance. Milton.

Would your son engage in some frolic, or take a vagary, were it not better he should do it with than without your knowledge? Locke.

VAGINOPE'NNOUS. adj. [vagina and penna, Lat.] Sheath-winged; having the wings covered with hard cases.

VAGRANCY. n. f. [from vagrant.] A state of wandering; unsettled condition.

VAGRANT. adj. Wandering; unsettled; vagabond; unfixed in place.

Do not oppose popular mistakes and surmises, or vagrant and fictitious stories. Mare.

'Take good heed what men will think and say; That beautiful Emma vagrant courtes took, Her father's house, and civil life forsook. Prior.

Her lips no living bard, I ween,
 May say how red, how round, how sweet;
 Old Homer only could imitate

Their vagrant grace, and soft delight:
 They stand recorded in his book,
 When Helen smil'd, and Hebe spoke. Prior.

VAGRANT. n. f. [vagrant, French.] A sturdy beggar; wanderer; vagabond; man unsettled in habitation. In an ill sense.

Vagrants and outlaws shall offend thy view, Train'd to assault, and disciplin'd to kill. Prior.

You'll not the progress of your atoms stay,
 Nor to collect the vagrants find a way. Blackmore.

To relieve the helpless poor; to make sturdy vagrants relieve themselves; to hinder idle hands from being mischievous, are things of evident use. F. Atterbury.

Ye vagrants of the sky,
 To right or left unheeded take your way. Pope.

VAGUE. adj. [vague, Fr. vagus, Lat.]

1. Wandering; vagrant; vagabond.

Gray encouraged his men to set upon the vague villains, good neither to live peaceably, nor to fight. Hayward.

2. Unfixed; unsettled; undetermined; indefinite.

The perception of being, or not being, belongs no more to these vague ideas, signified by the terms, whatsoever and thing, than it does to any other ideas. Locke.

VAIL. n. f. [voile, Fr.] This word is now frequently written veil, from velum, Lat. and the verb veil, from the verb velo; but the old orthography commonly derived it, I believe rightly, from the Fr.]

1. A curtain; a cover thrown over any thing to be concealed.

While they supposed to lie hid in their secret sins, they were scattered under a dark veil of forgetfulness. Wisdome.

2. A part of female dress, by which the face and part of the shape is concealed.

3. Money given to servants. It is commonly used in the plural. See VALE.

To VAIL. v. a. To cover. See VEIL.

To VAIL. v. a. [avalier le bonet, French. Addison writes it veil, ignorantly.]

1. To let fall; to suffer to descend.

They stiffly refused to veil their bonnets, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by seafarers. Carew.

The virgin 'gan her beavoir veil,
 And thank'd him first, and thus began her tale. Falstaff.

2. To let fall in token of respect.

Certain of the Turks gallies, which would not veil their topmasts, the Venetians fiercely assailed. Knelles.

Before my princely state let your poor greatness fall,
 And vail your tops to me, the sovereign of you all. Drayton.

They had not the ceremony of veiling the bonnet in salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads. Addison.

3. To fall; to let sink in fear, or for any other interest.

That furious Scot
 'Gan vail his stomach, and did grace the shame
 Of those that turn'd their backs. Shakespeare

To VAIL. v. n. To yield; to give place; to show respect by yielding. In this sense, the modern writers have ignorantly written veil.

Thy convenience must veil to thy neighbour's necessity; and thy very necessities must yield to thy neighbour's extremity. South.

VAIN. adj. [vain, Fr. vanus, Lat.]

1. Fruitless; ineffectual.

Let no man speak again
 To alter this; for counsel is but vain. Shakespeare.

Vain is the force of man,
 To crush the pillars which the pile sustains. Dryden.

2. Empty; unreal; shadowy.

Before the passage horrid Hydra stands,
 Gorgons, Geryon with his triple frame,
 And vain Chimera vomits empty flame. Dryden.

Unmov'd his eyes, and wet his beard appears;
 And shedding vain, but seeming real tears. Dryden.

3. Meantly proud; proud of petty things; with of before the cause of vanity.

No folly like vain glory; nor any thing more ridiculous than for a vain man to be still boasting of himself. L'Estrange.

He wav'd a torch aloft, and, madly vain,
 Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryden.

The minstrels play'd on every side,
Vain of their art, and for the mastery vy'd. Dryden.

To be vain is rather a mark of humility than pride. Vain men delight in telling what honours have been done them, what great company they have kept, and the like; by which they plainly confess, that these honours were more than their due, and such as their friends would not believe, if they had not been told: whereas a man truly proud thinks the honours below his merit, and is scorn to boast. Swift.

Al friend! to dazzle let the vain design;
 To raise the thought, and touch the heart, be thine. Pope.

Here learn the great unreal wants to feign,
 Unpleasing truths here mortify the vain. Savage.

Ye vain! do flit from your erroneous strife;
 Be wise, and quit the false sublime of life;
 The true ambition there alone resides,
 Where justice vindicates, and wisdom guides. Young.

4. Showy; ostentatious.

Load some vain church with old theatrick state. Pope.

5. Idle; worthless; unimportant.

Both all things vain, and all who in vain things
 Built their fond hopes of glory, or lasting fame,
 Or happiness. Milton.

He heard a grave philosopher maintain,
 That all the actions of our life were vain,
 Which with our sense of pleasure not conspir'd. Denham.

To your vain answer will you have recourse,
 And tell 'tis ingenuit active force. Blackmore.

6. False; not true.

7. In VAIN. To no purpose; to no end; ineffectually; without effect.

He tempts in vain. Milton.

V A I

V A U

Providence and nature never did any thing in vain. L'Estrange.

Strong Halys stands in vain; weak Phlegyas flies. Dryden.

The philosophers of old did in vain enquire, whether summum bonum consisted in riches, bodily delights, virtue, or contemplation. Locke.

If we hope for what we are not likely to possess, we act and think in vain, and make life a greater dream and shadow than it really is. Addison.

If from this discourse one honest man shall receive satisfaction, I shall think that I have not written nor lived in vain. Wet.

VAINGLO'RIOUS. adj. [vanus and gloriosus, Lat.] Boasting without performances; proud in disproportion to desert.

Vain-glorious man, when fluttering wind does blow,
 In his light wings is lifted up to fly. Spenser.

Strength to glory aspires
Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame. Milton.

This his arrogant and vain-glorious expression witnesseth. Hale.

VAINGLO'RY. n. f. [vana gloria, Latin.]

Pride above merit; empty pride; pride in little things.

He had nothing of vain-glory, but yet kept state and majesty to the height; being sensible, that majesty maketh the people bow, but vain-glory boweth to them. Bacon.

Expose every blast of vain-glory, every idle thought, to be chastened by the rod of spiritual discipline. Taylor.

This extraordinary person, out of his natural aversion to vain-glory, wrote several pieces which he did not assume the honour of. Addison.

A monarch's sword when mad vain-glory draws,
 Not Waller's wreath can hide the nation's scars. Pope.

VAINLY. adv. [from vain.]

1. Without effect; to no purpose; in vain.

Our cannons' malice vainly shall be spent Against th' invulnerable clouds of heav'n. Shakspeare.

In weak complaints you vainly waste your breath,
 They are not tears that can revenge his death. Dryden.

2. Proudly; arrogantly.

Humility teaches us to think neither vainly nor vauntingly of ourselves. De la V.

3. Idly; foolishly.

Nor vainly hope to be invulnerable. Milton.

If Lentulus be ambitious, he shall be vainly credulous; presuming his advancement to be decreed by the Sybilline oracles. Grav.

VAINNESS. n. f. [from vain.] The state of being vain; pride; falsehood; emptiness.

I hate ingratitude more in a man,
 Than lying, vainness, babbling. Shakespeare.

VAIN, or VAINLY. adj. [in heraldry.] Variegated with coverings of gold, red, or other colours.

VAINODE. n. f. [vainod, a govtour, Slavonian.] A prince of the Ducian provinces.

VALANCE. n. f. [from Valencia, whence the use of them came, Skinner.] The fringes of drapery hanging round the tetter and head of a bed.

My house
 Is richly furnished with plate and gold;
 Valance of Venice, gold in needlework. Shakspeare.

Thrust the valance of the bed, that it may be full in sight. Swift.

To VALANCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To decorate with drapery. Not in use.

Old friend, thy face is valance since I saw thee last; couldst thou to bend me? Shakespeare.

VALE. n. f. [val, Fr. vallis, Lat.]

1. A low ground; a valley; a place between two hills. Vale is a poetical word.

VAL

In Ida vale: who knows not Ida vale?
As hundred shepherds waned.
Met in the vale of Arde.
Spenser.
Shakespeare.
Arden, in a flow'ry vale,
Review'd his madd'g' love, and took the tale.

In those fair vales by nature form'd to please,
Where Guadalquivir serpentine with ease, Horat.
a. [From avail, profit; or vale, farewell.
If from avail, it must be written vail, as Dryden writes. If from vale, which I think is right, it must be vale.] Money given to servants.
Since our knights and senators account
To what their fordid, begging rails amount;
Judge what a wretched share the poor attends;
Whole whole subsistence on those alms depends.
Dryden.
His revenue, besides vales, amounted to thirty pounds.
Swift.
VALEDICTION. n. f. [valedico, Lat.] A farewell.
A valediction forbidding to weep. Dumne.
VALEDICTORY. adj. [from valedico, Lat.]
Bidding farewell.
VALENTINE. n. f. A sweetheart chosen on Valentine's day.
Now all nature seem'd in love,
And birds had drawn their valentines. Wotton.
VALERIAN. n. f. [valeriana, Lat. valer- ian, Fr.] A plant.
Valet. n. f. [valet, Fr.] A waiting servant.
Giving cast-clothes to be worn by valets, has a very ill effect upon little minds. Addison.
VALETUDINARIAN. } adj. [valetudinaire,
VALETUDINARY. } Fr. valetudo, Lat.]
Weakly; sickly; infirm of health.
Physic, by purging noxious humours, prevents sickness in the healthy, or recoures thereof in the valetudinary. Brown.
Shifting from the warmer vallies to the colder hills, or from the hills to the vales, is a great benefit to the valetudinarian, feeble part of mankind.
Perham.
Some patients have been liable to this symptom, and reduced by it to a valetudinarian and very unequal state of health. Blackmore.
Cold of winter, by stopping the pores of perspiration, keeps the warmth more within; whereby there is a greater quantity of spirits generated in healthy animals, for the case is quite otherwise in valetudinarian ones. Cheyne.
Valetudinarians must live where they can command and scold. Swift.
VALENCE. n. f. [from valiant; valliance, Fr.] Valour; personal puissance; fierce-ness; bravery. Not in use.
With stiff force he shook his mortal lance
To let him weet his doughty valliance. Spenser.
VALIANT. adj. [valliant, Fr.] Stout; personally puissant; brave. We say, a valiant man; a valiant action.
Only be thou valiant for me, and fight the Lord's battles. 1 Samuel.
Hale, a very valiant fencer, undertook to teach that science in a look, and was laughed at. Walton.
The church of Antioch might meet at that time to celebrate the memory of such a valiant combat and martyr of Christ. Nelson.
VALIANTLY. adv. [from valiant.] Stoutly; with personal strength; with personal bravery.
Farewel, kind lord; fight valiantly to-day:
Thou art arm'd of the firm truth of valour.
Shakespeare.
It was the duty of a good soldier valiantly to withstand his enemies, and not to be troubled with any evil hap. Kneller.
VALIANTNESS. n. f. [from valiant.] Valour; personal bravery; puissance;
fierceuess; stoutness.

VAL

Thy valliance was mine; thou suck'dst it from me. Shakespeare.
Achilles having won the top of the walls, by the
valliance of the defendants was forced to retire.
Kneller.
Shew not thy valliance in wine. Eccelesiasticus.
VALID. adj. [valide, Fr. validus, Lat.]
1. Strong; powerful; efficacious; prevalent.
Perhaps more valid arms,
Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
May serve to better us, and worse our foes. Milton.
2. Having intellectual force; prevalent;
weighty; conclusive.
A difference in their sentiments as to particular questions, is no valid argument against the general truth believed by them, but rather a clearer and more solid proof of it. Stephens.
VALIDITY. n. f. [validité, Fr. from valid.]
1. Force to convince; certainty.
You are persuaded of the validity of that famous verse,
Tis expectation makes a blessing dear. Pope.
2. Value. A sense not used.
To thee and thine
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom;
No less in space, validity, and pleasure,
Than that conferr'd on Goneril. Shakespeare.
VALLANCE. n. f. [from vallance.] A large wig that shades the face.
But you, loud sir, who through your curls look big,
Criticks in plume and white vallance wig Dryden.
VALLEY. n. f. [vallée, Fr. vallis, Lat.]
A low ground; a hollow between hills.
Vallies are the intervals betwixt mountains.
Woodward.
Live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasure prove
That hills and vallies yield. Raleigh.
Sweet interchange of hill and vallies. Milton.
I have been ready to freeze on the top of a hill, and in an hour's time after have inured my great inconvenience from the heat of the vallies. Brown.
VALOROUS. adj. [from valour.] Brave;
stout; valiant.
The famous warriors of the antique world
Us'd trophies to erect in stately wife,
In which they would the records have enroll'd
Of their great deeds and valorous enterprise.
Spenser.
Captain Juny is a marvellous valorous gentleman.
Shakespeare.
VALOROUSLY. adv. [from valorous.] In a brave manner.
VALOUR. n. f. [valour, Fr. valor, Lat.
Alisworth.] Personal bravery; strength;
prowess; puissance; stoutness.
That I may pour the spirits in thine ear,
And chastise, with the valour of my tongue,
All that impedes thee. Shakespeare.
Here I contest
As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever an ambitious strength I did Contend against thy valour. Shakespeare.
When valour preys on reason,
It eats the sword it fights with. Shakespeare.
An innate valour appeared in him, when he put himself upon the soldier's defence, as he received the mortal stab. Hovel.
For contemplation he, and valour form'd;
For softness she, and sweet attractive grace. Milton.
Such were these giants; men of high renown!
For, in those days, might only shall be admir'd,
And valour, and heroic virtue, call'd. Milton.
Valour gives awe, and promises protection to those who want heart or strength to defend themselves.
This makes the authority of men among women;
and that of a master-back in a numerous herd.
Temple.
VALUABLE. adj. [valable, Fr. from value.]
1. Precious; being of great price.

VAL

2. Worthy; deserving regard.

A just account of that valuable person, which remains lie before us. F. Atterbury.
The value of several circumstances in story, lessens very much by distance of time; though some minute circumstances are very valuable. Swift.
VALUATION. n. f. [from value.]
1. The act of setting a value; appraisal-ment.
Humility in man consists not in denying any gift that is in him, but in a just valuation of it, rather thinking too meanly than too highly. Ray.
2. Value set upon any thing.
No reason I find of your lives you set
So slight a valuation, should receive
My orack'd out to more rate. Shakespeare.
Take out of men's minds false valuations, and it would leave the minds of a number of men poor shrunken things. Bacon.
The writers expressed not the valuation of the denarius, without regard to its present valuation.
Arbutnot.
VALUATOR. n. f. [from value.] An appraiser; one who sets upon any thing its price. A word which I have found now where else.
What valuators will the bishops make use of?
Swift.
VALUE. n. f. [value, Fr. valor, Latin:];
1. Price; worth.
Ye are physicians of no value. Job.
Learn to live for your own sake, and the service of God; and let nothing in the world be of any value with you, but that which you can turn into a service to God, and a means of your future happiness. Lew.
2. High rate.
Cesar is well acquainted with your virtues,
And therefore sets this value on your life:
Let him but know the price of Cato's friendship,
And name your terms. Addison.
3. Rate; price equal to the worth of the thing bought.
He sent him money; it was with this obliging testimony, that his design was not to pay him the value of his pictures, because they were above any price. Dryden.
To VALUE. v. a. [valoir, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To rate at a certain price.
When the country grows better inhabited, the tithes and other obligations will be more augmented, and better valued. Spenser.
A man valuing his reputation at the due price, will repute all dishonest gain much inferior there-unto. Carew.
God alone values right the good. Milton.
2. To rate highly; to have in high esteem.
Some of the finest treasures in dialogue, many very valued pieces of French, Italian, and English appear. Addison.
He values himself upon the compassion with which he relieved the afflicted. Atterbury.
To him your orchard's early fruits are due;
A pleasing offering, when 'tis made by you;
He values these. Pope.
3. To appraise; to estimate.
If he be poorer than estimation, the price shall value him. Lection.
4. To be worth; to be equal in worth to.
The peace between the French and us not valued.
The cost that did conclude it. Shakespeare.
5. To take account of.
If a man be in sickness, the time will seem longer without a clock than with; for the mind doth value
every moment. Bacon.
6. To reckon at, with respect to number or power.
The queen is valued thirty thousand strong;
Her faction will be full as strong as ours. Shakespeare.
7. To consider with respect to importunee;
to hold important.
The king must take it ill.
So slightly valued in his messenger. Shakespeare.

VAN

Neither of them valued their promises, according to rules of honour or integrity. Cloveland.

8. To compare with respect to price, or excellence.

It cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir. Joh.
9. To raise to estimation. This is a sense not in use.

She ordered all things, resisting the wisdom of the wisest, by making the possessor thereof miserable; valuing the folly of the most foolish, by making the success prosperous. Sidney.

Some value themselves to their country by jealousies of the crown. Temple.

Vanity, or a desire of valuing ourselves by showing others faults. Temple.

VA'LU'LESS. adj. [from value.] Being of no value.

A counterfeit Resembling majesty; which, touch'd and tried, Proves valueless. Shakspeare.

VA'LUER. n. f. [from value.] He that values.

Hammond was no valuer of trifles. Fell.

VALVE. n. f. [valva, Latin.]

1. A folding door.

Swift through the valves the visionary fair

Repas'd. Pope.

Opening their valves, self-mov'd on either side,

The adamantine doors expanded wide:

When death commands they close, when death commands divide. Harte.

2. Any thing that opens over the mouth of a vessel.

This air, by the opening of the valve, and forcing up of the sucker, may be driven out. Boyle.

3. [In anatomy.] A kind of membrane, which opens in certain vessels to admit the blood, and shuts to prevent its regress.

The arteries, with a contractile force, drive the blood still forward; it being hindered from going backward by the valves of the heart. Arbuthnot.

VA'LV'LE. n. f. [valvula, Fr.] A small valve.

VAMP. n. f. The upper leather of a shoe.

Ainsw.

To VAMP. v. a. [This is supposed probably enough by Skinner to be derived from avant, Fr. before; and to mean, laying on a new outside.] To piece an old thing with some new part.

You with

To vamp a body with a dangerous physick,

Shut's lure of death without. Shakspeare.

This opinion hath been vamped up by Cardan.

Ventily.

I had never much hopes of your vamped play.

VA'MPER. n. f. [from ramp.] One who pieces out an old thing with something new.

VAN. n. f. [from avant, Fr.]

1. The front of an army; the first line.

Before each can prick forth the airy knights.

Milton.

The foe he had survey'd,

Arrang'd, as if him they did appear.

With van, main battle, wings and rear. Hudibras.

Van to run the foremost squadrons meet.

The midmost battles bustling up behind. Dryden.

2. [van, Fr. vannus, Latin.] Any thing spread wide by which a wind is raised;

a fan.

The other token of their ignorance of the sea was an oar, they call it a corn can. Broome.

3. A wing with which the air is beaten.

His sail-broad van

He spreads for flight, and in the surging smoke

Up-blasts from the ground. Milton.

A fiery globe

Of unpeopled full sail of wing drew nigh,

Who on their plummy vans receiv'd him soft

VAN

From his uneasy bedden, and apores,
As on a floating couch, through the blithe air. Milton.

His disabled wing unfurrow'd:
He wheel'd in air, and stretch'd his vans in vain;
His vans no longer could his flight sustain. Dryden.

The vanes are broad on one side, and narrower on the other; both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird. Derham.

To VAN, v. a. [from vannus, Lat. vanner,

Fr.] To fan; to winnow. Not in use.

The corn which 'in vanning lieth lowest in the best. Becon.

VA'NCOURIER. n. f. [avantcourier, Fr.]

A harbinger; a precursor.

VANE. n. f. [vane, Dut.] A plate hung on a pin to turn with the wind.

A man she would spell backward;

If tall, a lance ill-headed;

If speaking, why a vane blown with all winds.

Shakspeare.

VA'NGUARD. n. f. [avant garde, Fr.] The front, or first line of the army.

The king's vant-guard maintained fight against the whole power of the enemies. Becon.

The martial Idomen, who bravely stood before

In vant-guard of his troops, and march'd, for strength a savage horse. Chapman.

Vanguard to right and left the front unfold.

Milton.

VAN'ILLA. n. f. [vanille, Fr.] A plant.

The fruit of those plants is used to scent chocolate. Miller.

When mixed with vanillas, or spices, chocolate acquires the good and bad qualities of aromatic oils. Arbuthnot.

To VA'NISH. v. n. [vanesco, Lat. evanescere,

French.]

1. To lose perceptible existence.

High honour is not only gotten and born by pain and danger, but must be nursed by the like, or else

vanisheth as soon as it appears to the world. Sidney.

While fancy brings the vanish'd piles to view,

And builds imaginary Rome anew. Pope.

2. To pass away from the sight; to disappear.

Whither are they vanish'd?

—Into the air; and what seem'd corporal

Melted as breath into the wind. Shakspeare.

Now I have taken heart, thou vanish'st. Shakspeare.

He cut the cleaving sky,

And in a moment vanish'd from her eye. Pope.

3. To pass away; to be lost.

All these delights will vanish. Milton.

That spirit of religion and seriousness, by which we had distinguished ourselves, vanish'd all at once, and a spirit of infidelity and propinquity started up. Atterbury.

VA'NITY. n. f. [vanitas, Lat. vanité, Fr.]

1. Eminentness; uncertainty; inanity.

Vanities of vanities, all is vanity. Feeblestuffs.

2. Fruitless desire; fruitless endeavour.

Vanity poss'eth many, who are desirous to know the certainty of things to come. Sidney.

Thy pride,

And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,

Rejected my forewarning. Milton.

3. Trifling labour.

To use long discourse against those things which are both against scripture and reason, might rightly be judged a vanity in the answerer, not much inferior to that of the inventor. Raleigh.

4. Falshood; untruth.

Here I may well show the vanity of that which is reported in the story of Walsin, hum.

Sir J. Davies.

5. Empty pleasure; vain pursuit; idle show; unsubstantial enjoyment; petty object of pride.

Were it not strange if God should have made such store of glorious creatures on earth, and leave them all to be consumed in secular vanity, allowing none but the baser sort to be employed in his own service? Hooker.

VAN

VAN

I must
Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple
Some vanity of mine art. Shakspeare.

Cast not her serious wit on idle things;
Make her free will slave to vanity. Devin.

Sin with vanity had fill'd the works of men. Milton.

The eldest equal the youngest in the vanity of their dress; and no other reason can be given of it, but that they equal, if not surpass them, in the vanity of their desires. Sout.

Think not, when woman's transient breath is staid,

That all her vanities at once are dead;

Succeeding vanities she still regards,

And though she plays no more, o'erlooks the cards. Pope.

6. Ostentation; arrogance.

The ground-work thereof is true, however they,

through vanity, whilst they would not seem to be ignorant, do thereupon build many forged histories of their own antiquity. Spenser.

Whether it were out of the same vanity which possessed all those learned philosophers and poets, that Plato also published, not under the right authors' names, those things which he had read in the scriptures; or fearing the severity of the Aro-pugite, and the example of his master Socrates, I cannot judge. Ralegh.

7. Petty pride; pride exerted on slight grounds; pride operating upon small occasions.

Can you add guilt to vanity, and take

A pride to hear the conquests which you make? Dryden.

'Tis an old maxim in the schools,

That vanity's the food of fools;

Yet now and then your men of wit

Will condescend to take a bit. Sir J.

The corruption of the world indulges women in great vanity; and mankind seem to consider the in no other view, than as to many painted idols, that are to allure and gratify their passions. Idem.

To VA'NQUISH. v. a. [vaincre, Fr.]

1. To conquer; to overcome; to subdue.

Were't not a shame, that, whilst you live at ease,

The fearful French, whom you late vanquish'd,

Should make a start o'er seas, and vanquish you? Shakspeare.

They subdued and vanquish'd the rebels in all encounters. Cloveland.

The gods the victor, Cato the vanquish'd check

But you have done what Cato could not do,

To chafe the vanquish'd, and reform him too. Dryden.

2. To confute.

This bold assertion has been fully vanquish'd in a late reply to the bishop of Meaux's treatise. F. Atterbury.

VA'NQUISHER. n. f. [from vanquish.]

Conqueror; subduer.

He would pawn his fortunes

To hopeless restitution, so he might

Be call'd your vanquisher. Shakspeare.

I shall rise victorious, and subdue

My vanquisher; I spoil'd of his vaunted spoil. Milton.

Troy's vanquisher and great Achilles' son.

A. Phillips.

VA'NTAGE. n. f. [from advantage.]

1. Gain; profit.

What great vantage do we get by the trade of a pastor? South.

2. Superiority; state in which one hath better means of action than another.

With the vantage of mine own excuse,

Hath he excepted most against my love. Shakspeare.

He had them at vantage, being tired and harassed with a long march. Becon.

The pardoned person must not think to find upon the same vantage of ground with the innocent. South.

3. Opportunity; convenience.

Be assur'd, madam, 'twill be done

With his next vantage. Shakspeare.

To VA'NTAGE. v. a. [from advantage.]

To profit. Not in use.

VAP

We yet of present peril be afraid;
For needful food did never want more. Spenser.
VANTAGE. n. f. [from vantage, French.]
Armour for the arm.

Till hide my face in a gold beaver,
And in my mantle wrap me in a brown. Shak.
Put on mantle, and grove, and gaudet.
Milton.

VAPID. adj. [from rapid, Latin.] Dead;
having the spirit evaporated; spiritless;
mawkish; flat.

Thy wines let feed a while
On the fat refuse; left, too soon disjointed,
From sprightly to sharp or rapid change. Philips.
The effects of a rapid and viscous constitution of blood, are flaguation, acrimony, and putrefaction.
Arbutnot.

VAPIDNESS. n. f. [from rapid.] The state of being spiritless or mawkish;
mawkishness.

VAPORATION. n. f. [from vapor, Fr. vapor, Lat. from vapor.] The act of escaping in vapours.

VAPORER. n. f. [from vapor.] A boaster;
a braggart.

This shows these vapours, to what scorn they expose themselves. Government of the Tongue

VAPORISH. adj. [from vapor.]

1. Vaporous; full of vapours.

It proceeded from the nature of the vapourish place. Sandys.

2. Splenetic; peevish; humourful.

Pallas grew vap'rish once and odd,
She would not do the least right thing. Pope.

VAPOROUS. adj. [from vapor, Fr. from vapour.]

1. Full of vapours or exhalations; fummy.

The vaporous might approach. Shakspere.

This shifting air abode from the warmer and more vaporous air of the vallies, to the colder and more subtle air of the hills, is a great benefit to the valetudinarian part. Dehman.

2. Windy; flatulent.

It the mother eat much beans, or such vaporous food, it endangers the child to become flatulent.
Bacon.

Some more subtle corporeal element may equally bear against the parts of a little vaporous mixture, as to form it into round drops. More.

The food which is most vaporous and perspira-ble, is the most easily digested. Arbutnot.

A little tube, jetting out from the extremity of an artery, may carry off these vaporous streams of the blood. Cheyne.

VAPOUR. n. f. [from vapeur, Fr. vapor, Lat.]

1. Any thing exhalable; any thing that mingles with the air.

Jove a dreadful storm call'd forth

Against our navy; covered here and all

With gloomy vapours. Chapman.

Vapour, and mist, and exhalation hot. Milton.

When first the sun too powerful beams displays,

It draws up vapours which obscure its rays;

But ev'n those clouds at last adorn its way,

Reflect new glories, and augment the day. Pope.

2. Fume; steam.

The morning is the best, because the imagination

is not clouded by the vapours of meat. Dryden.

In distilling hot spirits, if the head of the still be taken off, the vapour which ascends out of the still will take fire at the flame of a candle, and the flame will run along the vapour from the candle to the still. Newton.

For the impotthame, the vapour of vinegar, and any thing which creates a cough, are proper.

Arbutnot.

3. Wind; flatulence.

In the Thesalian witches, and the meetings of witches that have been recorded, great wonders they tell, of carrying in the air, transforming themselves into other bodies. These fables are the effects of imagination; for ornaments. If laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and lead them to the head extremely. Bacon.

4. Mental fume; vain imagination; fancy unreal.

If his arrow bring forth amendment, he hath the grace of hope, though it be clouded over with a melancholy vapour, that it be not discernible even to himself. Hammond.

5. [In the plural.] Diseases caused by flatulence; or by diseased nerves; hypochondriacal maladies; melancholy;
spleen.

To this we must ascribe the spleen, so frequent in studious men, as well as the vapours, to which the other sex are so often subject. Epistator.

To VAPOUR. v. n. [from vapor, Lat.]

1. To pass in a vapour or fume; to fly off in evaporations.

When thou from this world wilt go,
The whole world vapours in thy breath. Donne.

2. To emit fumes.

Swift running waters vapour not so much as standing waters. Bacon.

3. To bully; to brag.

Not true, quoth he? How'er you vapour,

I can what I affirm make appear. Hudibras.

These are all the mighty pow'rs

You vainly boast, to try down ours;

And what in real value's wanting,

Supply with vapouring and ranting. Hudibras.

That I might not be vapour'd down by insignificant testimonies, I used the name of your society to annihilate all such arguments. Glanville.

Pe you to us but kind;

Let Dutchmen vapour, Spaniards curse,

No sorrow we shall find. E. Doucet.

To VAPOUR. v. a. To effuse, or scatter

in fume or vapour.

Break off this last lamenting life,

Which sucks two souls, and caurs both away. Donne.

He'd laugh to see one throw his heart away,

Another fighting vapour forth his soul,

A third to melt himself in tears. Ben Jonson.

Opium holds some of its poisonous quality, it evaporated out, and mingled with spirit of wine.

Bacon.

It must be helped by somewhat which may fix the silver, never to be refined, or vapoured away, when incorporated into such a mass of gold. Bacon.

VARIABLE. adj. [from variable, Fr. variabilis, Lat.] Changeable; mutable; inconstant.

O swear not by the inconstant moon,

That monthly changes in her cruel orb,

Lest that thy love prove likewise variable. Shaksp.

Happy countries differ,

With variable objects, shall expect.

Thus something settled matter in his heart. Shaksp.

By the lively image of other creatures did those ancients represent the variable passions of mortals,

as by serpents were signified deceivers. Rowleigh.

His heart I know how variable, and vain,

Self to it. Milton.

VARIABLENESS. n. f. [from variable.]

1. Changeableness; mutability.

You are not solicitous about the variableness of the weather, or the change of seasons. Addison.

2. Levity; inconstancy.

Censurers subject themselves to the change of variableness in judgment. Clariss.

VARIABLELY. adv. [from variable.] Changeably; mutably; inconstantly; uncertainly.

VARIANCE. n. f. [from vary.] Discord;

disagreement; dissension.

I come to let a man at variance against his father.

Matthew.

A cause of law, by violent course,

Was, from a variance, now a war become. Daniel.

Set not any one doctrine of the gospel at variance with others, which are all admirably consistent. Sprutt.

She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen;

While a kind glance at her pursuer flies,

How much at variance are her feet and eyes! Pope.

VAN

If the learned would not sometimes thought to the ignorant; the old to the weakness of the young; there would be nothing but confounding variance in the world. Swift.

Many bleed,
By sinners' variance betwixt man and man. Thurston.

Who are they that set the first and second things at variance with each other, when for hundred centuries, and more, they have agreed most amicably together? Waterland.

VARIATION. n. f. [from variatio, Latin; variation, French.]

1. Change; mutation; difference from itself.

After much variation of opinions, the prisoner was acquitted of treason, but by most voices found guilty of felony. Hayward.

The operation of agents will easily admit of intention and remission; but the senses of things are conceived not capable of any such variation. Locke.

The same of our writers is confined to these two islands; and it is hard it should be limited in time as much as place, by the perpetual variations of our speech. Swift.

There is but one common matter, which is diversified by accidents; and the same numerical quantity, by variations of texture, may constitute successively all kind of body. Beutley.

2. Difference; change from one to another.

In some other places are more learned born than males; which, upon this variation of proportion, I recommend to the curious. Grout.

Each fish had its peculiar shells, and the same variety of shells; thus tract abounding such a terrible matter as is proper for the formation of one sort of shell fish; that of another. Woodward.

3. Successive change.

Sir Walter Blunt,

Stain'd with the variation of each soil

Between that Holmedon and this seat of ours. Shakspere.

4. [In grammar.] Change of termination of nouns.

The rules of grammar, and useful examples of the variation of words, and the peculiar form of speech, are often appointed to be repeated. Watts.

5. Change in natural phenomena.

The duke ran a long course of calm prosperity,

without any visible eclipse or wane in himself,

amidst divers revolutions in others. Wotton.

6. Deviation.

He observed the variation of our English from the original, and made an true translation of the whole for his private use. Fell.

If we admit a variation from the state of his creation, that variation must be necessarily after an eternal duration, and therefore within the compass of time. Hale.

I may seem sometimes to have varied from his sense; but the greatest variations may be fairly deduced from him. Dryden.

7. Variation of the compass; deviation of the magnetick needle from an exact parallel with the meridian.

VARIABLE. adj. [from variabilis, Latin.] Diseased with dilatation.

There are instances of one vein only being various, which may be destroyed by tying it above and below the dilatation. Sharp.

To VARIEGATE. v. a. [from variatus, school Latin.] To diversify; to stain with different colours.

The shells are filled with a white spar, which variegates and adds to the beauty of the stone. Woodward.

They had fountains of variegated marble in these rooms. Arbutnot.

Ladies like variegated tulip show;

To the changes half the clothes we owe.

Such happy spots the nice admirers take,

Five by defect, and delicately weak. Pope.

VARIEGATION. n. f. [from variatus.]

Diversity of colours.

V A R

Plant your choice tulips in natural earth, somewhat impoverished with very fine sand; else they will soon lose their variegations. Eoslyn.

VARIETY. n. f. [variété, Fr. varietas,
Latin.]

1. Change; succession of one thing to another; intermixture of one thing with another.

All sorts are here; that all the earth yields;
Variety without end. Milton.

Variety is nothing else but a continued novelty.
South.

If the sun's light consisted of but one sort of rays,
there would be but one colour in the whole world,
nor would it be possible to produce any new colour
by reflections or refractions; and by consequence that the variety of colours depends upon the composition of light. Newton.

2. One thing of many by which variety is made. In this sense it has a plural.

The inclosed warmth which the earth hath in itself, stirred up by the heat of the sun, afflueth nature in the speedier procreation of those varieties which the earth bringeth forth. Ruleigh.

3. Difference; dissimilitude.

There is a variety in the tempers of good men,
with relation to the different impressions they receive from different objects of charity. F. Atterbury.

4. Variation; deviation; change from a former state.

It were a great vanity to reject those reasons drawn from the nature of things, or to go about to answer those reasons by suppositions of a variety in things, from what they now appear. Hale.

5. Many and different kinds.

He now only wants more time to do that variety of good which his soul thirsts after. Law.

VARIOUS. adj. [varius, Latin.]

1. Different; several; manifold.

Then were they known to men by various names,
And various idols, through the heathen world. Milton.

2. Changeable; uncertain; unfixed; unlike itself.

The names of mixed modes want standards in nature, whereby to adjust their signification; therefore they are very various and doubtful. Locke.

3. Unlike each other.

He in derision sets
Upon their tongues a various spirit,
To raise quite out their native language. Milton.

So many and so various laws are given. Milton.

Vast crowds of vanquish'd nations march along,
Various in arms, in habit, and in tongue. Dryden.

Various of temper, as of face or frame,
Each individual: his great end the same. Pope.

4. Variegated; diversified.

Herbs sudden flower'd,
Opening their various colours. Milton.

VARIOUSLY. adv. [various, Latin.] In a various manner.

Having been variously tossed by fortune, directed his course to a safe harbour. Bacon.

Various objects from the kine,
Variously representing. Milton.

Those various squadrons, variously design'd;
Each vessel freighted with a several load;
Each squadron waiting for a several wind;
All find but one, to burn them in the road. Dryd.

Different ailments, while they repair the fluids and solids, act variously upon them according to their different natures. Arbuthnot.

VARIX. n. f. [latius; varice, French.]

A dilatation of the vein.

In ulcers of the legs, accompanied with varices or dilatations of the veins, the varix can only be assisted by the bandage. Sharp.

VARLET. n. f. [varlet, old French, now
valet.]

1. Anciently a servant or footman.

Such lords ill example do give,
Where varlets and drabs so may live. Tassier.

They spy'd
A varlet running towards them hastily. Spenser.

V A R

2. A scoundrel; a rascal. This word has deviated from its original meaning, as far in Latin.

I am the varlet that ever cheats. Shaksp.

Where didst thou leave these varlets? Shaksp.

Thou, varlet, dost thy master's gains devote;
Thou wilt 't his ewes, and often twice so hour. Dryden.

When the Roman legions were in a disposition to mutiny, an impudent varlet, who was a private centinel, resolv'd to try the power of his eloquence. Addison.

VARLETRY. n. f. [from varlet.] Rabble;
crowd; populace.

Shall they hoist me up,
And shew me to the shouting varletry
Of censuring Rome? Shakspere.

VARNISH. n. f. [vernis, French; ver-niz, Latin.]

1. A matter laid upon wood, metal, or other bodies, to make them shine.

We'll put on those shall praise your excellence,
And set a double varnish on the same. Shakspere.

The fame of Cicero had not borne her age so well, if it had not been joined with some vanity.
Like unto varnish, that makes ceilings not only shine, but last. Bacon.

This the blue varnish, that the green eudears,
The sacred rust of twice ten hundred years. Pope.

2. Cover; palliation.

To VARNISH. v. a. [verniffer, vernir, Fr.
from the noun.]

1. To cover with something shining.

O vanity!
To set a pearl in steel so meanly varnish'd. Sidney.

Clamher not you up to the calcements,
Nor thrust your head into the public street,
To gaze on christian fools with varnish'd faces. Shakspere.

2. To cover; to conceal or decorate with something ornamental.

Specious deeds on earth, which glory excites,
Or close ambition varnish'd o'er with zeal. Milton.

Young people are used to varnish over their non-performance and forbearance of good actions by a pretence unto humility. Fell.

His manly heart was still above
Dissembled hate, or varnish'd love. Dryden.

Men episode the well-endow'd opinions in fashion,
and then seek arguments to make good their beauty,
or varnish over and cover their deformity. Locke.

3. To palliate; to hide with colour of rhetorick.

They varnish all their errors, and secure
The ill they act, and all the world endure. Denb.

Cato's voice was ne'er employ'd
To clear the guilty, and to varnish crimes. Addison.

Speak the plain truth, and varnish not your crimes! Philips.

VARNISHER. n. f. [from tarnish.]

1. One whose trade is to varnish.

An oil obtained of common oil may probably be of good use to surgeons and varnishers. Boyle.

2. A disfigurer; an adorning.

Modest dulness lurks in thought's disguise;
Thou varnisher of fools, and cheat of all the wife. Pope.

VARVELS. n. f. [vertelles, French.] Silver rings about the leg of a hawk, on which the owner's name is engraved. Diſt.

To VARY. v. a. [rarior, Latin; varier,
French.]

1. To change; to make unlike itself.

Let your ceaseless change
Vary to our great Creator still new praise. Milton.

2. To change to something else.

Gods, that never change their state,
Vary oft their love and hate. Waller.

The master's hand, which to the life can trace
The airs, the lines, the features of the face,
May, with a free and bolder stroke, express
A vary'd posture, or a stat'ring dress. Dendham.

V A S

We are to vary the customs, according to the time and country where the scene of action lies. Dryden.

He varies every shape with ease,
And tries all forms that may Pomona please. Pope.

3. To make of different kinds.

God hath divided the genius of men according to the different parts of the world; and varied their inclinations, according to the variety of actions to be performed. Bacon.

4. To diversify; to variegate.

God hath here
Vary'd his bounty so with new delights. Milton.

To VARY. v. a.

1. To be changeable; to appear in different forms.

Darkling stands
The varying shore o' the world. Shakspere.

2. To be unlike each other.

Those who made laws, had their minds polished above the vulgar; and yet unaccountably the public constitutions of nations vary. Cather.

3. To alter; to become unlike itself.

He had a strange interchanging of large and in-expected pardons, with several executions; which could not be imputed to any inconsistency, but to a principle he had set unto himself, that he would vary, and try both ways in turn. Bacon.

So varied he, and of his tortuous tram
Cur'd many a wanton wretch. Milton.

That each from other differs, first confess;
Next, that he varies from himself no less. Pope.

4. To deviate; to depart.

The crime consists in violating the law, and serving from the right rule of reason. Locke.

5. To succeed each other.

While fear and anger, with alternate grace,
Pant in her breast, and vary in her face. Addison.

6. To disagree; to be at variance.

In judgment of her substance thus they vary,
And vary thus in judgment of her fort;
For some her chair up to the brain do carry,
Some sink it down into the stomach's heat. Daniel.

7. To shift colours.

Will the falcon, stooping from above,
Smit with her varying plumage, spare the dove?
Admires the jay the insect's gilded wings?
Or hears the hawk when Philomela sings? Pope.

VARY. n. f. [from the verb.] Change;
alteration. Not in use.

Such smiling rogues as these foother every passion;
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks,
With every gale and vary of their masters. Shakspere.

VASCULAR. adj. [from vasculum, Lat.]

Consisting of vessels; full of vessels.

Nutrition of the solids is performed by the circulating liquid in the smallest vascular solids. Arbuthnot.

VASCULIFEROUS. adj. [vasculum and fero, Latin.] Such plants as have, beside the common calyx, a peculiar vessel to contain the seed, sometimes divided into cells; and these have always a munopetalous flower, either uniform or dis-form. Quincey.

VASE. n. f. [vasse, French; vasa, Latin.]

1. A vessel; generally a vessel rather for show than use.

The toilet stands unveil'd,
Each silver vase in my stick order laid. Pope.

2. It is used for a solid piece of ornamental marble.

VASSAL. n. f. [vassal, French; vassallo, Italian.]

1. One who holds of a superior lord.

My pretty prince, vassal to the emperor, can cost what money he pleases. Swift.

The vassals are invited to bring in their coun-plaies to the viceroy, who imprisons and chastises their matters. Addison.

2. A subject; a dependant.

ASTRIDITY. n.f. [castritas, Latin; from

VEGETABLE, n. f. [vegetabile, school Latin; vegetable, French.] Any thing that grows without culture, as herbs, trees, &c.

...with different from without.
...fixed to the earth, or to
...the variety of plants;
...means of pores distributed over the whole surface, as in (sub-marine plants.
Let fruits and vegetables that cannot drink. Hdt.

There are several kinds of creatures in the world, and degrees of dignity amongst them; some being more excellent than others, animals more than inanimate, sensibles more than vegetables, and men more than brutes.

Other animated substances are called vegetables, which have within themselves the principle of another sort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves, flowers, and fruit, such as we see in plants, herbs, trees.

VEGETABLE. adj. [vegetabilis, Latin.]
1. Belonging to a plant.
The vegetable world, each plant and tree,
From the fair cedar on the craggy brow,
To creeping moss.
Both mechanisms are equally curious, from one uniform figure to extract all the variety of vegetable images: or from such variety of effect to deduce the

2. Near the nature of plants.
Amidst them stood the tree of life,
High eminent, blooming ambrosial fruit
Of vegetable gold. Milton.
That vegetative terrestrial hath been ever the standing fund, out of which is derived the matter of all animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward.

To VEGETATE. v. n. [vegeto, Latin.] To grow as plants; to shoot out; to grow without sensation.

Rain-water may be endued with some vegetative or prolific virtue, derived from some saline

As long as the seeds remained lodged in a natural soil, they would soon vegetate, and send forth a new set of trees. Woodward

See dying vegetables life sustain;
See life dissolving vegetate again. Pope

VEGETATION. n. f. [from vegeto, Lat.]

1. The power of producing the growth of plants.

The exterior surface consisted of a reddish matter proper for the nourishment of plants, but little entangled with mere mineral matter, the Wood was unfit for vegetation.

The sun, deep-darting to the dark recess

Love warbles through the vocal groves,
And vegetation paints the plain.

2. The power of growth without fertilisation

Plants, though beneath the excellency of creatures endued with sense, yet exceed them in the faculty of vegetation and of fertility.

VEGETATIVE. adj. [from vegeto, Latin.] Vegetable; having the nature of plants.
Nor rent off, but cut off ripe down with a knife,
For hindering stalks of his vegetative life. Tupper.

VEGETATIVE. n. s. [from the adjective.]
A vegetable.
Hence vegetative receive their fragrant birth,
And clothe the naked bosom of the earth. Sandys.
The tree still panted in the unfinish'd part,
Not wholly vegetive; and heav'd her heart. Dryd.

VEHEMENCE. n. s. [from vehementia, Latin.]
1. Violence; force.
Universal hubbub wild,
Of running sounds and voices all confus'd,
Assaults his ear with loudest vehemence. Milton.

2. Ardour; mental violence; fervour.
Think ye are men; deem it not impossible for you to give life impartially your own hearts, whether it be force of reason, or vehemency of affection, which hath bred, and still doth feed these opinions in you. Hooker.

The best persuasions
Fail not to use; and with what vehemency
The occasion shall instruct you. Shakspeare.
Would it apply well to the vehemence of your affection, that I should win what you would enjoy? Shakspeare.

The extremity of the condition produced some earnestness and vehemency of expression more than ordinary. Clarendon.

This pure cause would kindle my rapt spirits
To such a flame of sacred vehemence,
That dumb things would be mov'd to sympathize. Milton.

He hurries on his action with variety of events, and ends it in less compass than two months. This vehemence of his is most suitable to my temper. Dryden.

Marcus is over-warm; his fond complaints
Have to much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper. Addison.

VEHEMENT. adj. [vehement, French; vehemens, Latin.]
1. Violent; forcible.

A strong imagination hath more force upon light and subtle motions, than upon motions vehement or ponderous. Bacon.
Gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time, without any change. Grew.

2. Ardent; eager; fervent.
By their vehement instigation,
Is this just suit come I to move your grace. Shakspeare.
I find
In all things else delight indeed; but such
As, us'd or not, works in the mind no change,
Nor vehement desire. Milton.

VEHEMENTLY. adv. [from vehement.]
1. Forcibly.

1. Pathetically; urgently.
The christian religion inculcates kindest more warmly, and forbids malice and hatred more strictly, than any religion did before. Tillotson.

VEHICLE. n. s. [vehiculum, Latin.]
1. That in which any thing is carried.
Evil spirits might very properly appear in the clothes of flames, to terrify and surprise. Addison.

2. That part of a medicine which serves to make the principal ingredient potable.
That the most delicate by one passage; the thick, or mollifying vehicle, by another, is a peculiar secret. Boyle.

VEIL.
1. To cover with a veil, or any thing which conceals the face.
Her face was veild; yet, to my fancied sight,
Lorn sweetest, goodness in her person shined. Milton.

2. To cover; to invest.
It became the Jewish fashion, when they went to pray, to veil their heads and faces. Boyle.

3. To hide; to conceal.
From yonder blazing cloud that veils the hill,
One of the heav'nly hoil. Milton.

4. To hide; to conceal.
Of darkness visible so much be lent,
As half to show, half sell the deep intent. Pope.

VEIL. n. s. [velum, Latin.]
1. A cover to conceal the face.
To feed his fiery lustful eye
He snatch'd the veil that hung over his face before. Spenser.

The Egyptian queen from that deep bathed her face,
With gored horns, and veil to redely torn.
Like towry did among the immortals breed. Waller.

The famous painter could allow no place
For private sorrow in a prince's face:
Yet, that his piece might not exceed belief,
He cast a veil upon supposed grief. Waller.

As veils transparent cover, but not hide,
Such metaphors appear when right apply'd.
When through the phrase we plainly see the sense,
Truth with such obvious meanings will dispense. Granville.

She accepts the hero, and the dame
Wraps in her veil, and frees from sense of shame. Pope.

2. A cover; a disguise.
I will pluck the borrowed veil of modesty from the so seeming Mrs. Page; divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Acton. Shakspeare.

Knock on my heart; for thou hast skill to find
If it found solid, or be fill'd with wind;
And thro' the veil of words thou view'st the naked mind. Dryden.

The ill-natured man exposes those failings in human nature, which the other would cast a veil over. Addison.

VEIN. n. s. [veine, French; vena, Latin.]
1. The veins are only a continuation of the extreme capillary arteries reflected back again towards the heart, and uniting their channels as they approach it, till at last they all form three large veins;
the cava descendens, which brings the blood back from all the parts above the heart; the cava ascendens, which brings the blood from all the parts below the heart; and the porta, which carries the blood to the liver. The coats of the veins are the same with those of the arteries, only the muscular coat is as thin in all the veins as it is in the capillary arteries; the pressure of the blood against the sides of the veins being less than that against the sides of the arteries. In the veins there is no pulse, because the blood is thrown into them with a continued stream, and because it moves from a narrow channel to a wider. The capillary veins unite with one another, as the capillary arteries. In all the veins perpendicular to the horizon, excepting those of the uterus and of the porta, are small membranous or valvular, like so many half thimbles stuck to the side of the veins, which oppose the blood towards the heart,
in the motion of the blood towards the heart, they are every close to the sides of the veins; but if blood should fall back, it must fill the valves; and being distended, stop up the channels, so that no blood can repeat them. Boyle.

What! did the first impart any love to me?
I freely told you all the wealth I had;
Man in my veins; I was a golden man.
Honey still
Man through his veins, and all his joints relax'd. Milton.

2. Hollow; cavity.
Found where casual fire
Had wasted woods, on mountain, or in vale,
Down to the veins of earth. Milton.

Let the glass of the prism be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plane, and well polished, without those numberless waves or curls, which usually arise from fund-holes. Newton.

3. Course of metal in the mine.
There is a vein for the silver. Job.
Part hidden veins dig'd up, nor hath the earth
Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone. Milton.

It is as men as in fells, where four times there is a vein of gold which the owner hath not all. Spenser.

4. Tenderness; softness of the mind or genius.
Invoke the muses, and improve my vein. Waller.
We ought to attempt no more than what is in the compass of our genius, and according to our vein. Dryden.

5. Favourable moment; time when any inclination is predominant.
Artizans have not only their growths and perfec-tions, but likewise their veins and times. Watson.

6. Humour; temper.
I put your grace in mind
Of what you promis'd me.
—I am not in the giving vein to-day. Shakspeare.

leitas*, from velle, Latin.] Velleity is the school-term used to signify the lowest degree of desire. Locke.

The willing of a thing is not properly the willing of it; but it is that which is called by the schools an incomplete volition, and imports no more than an idle, unoperative contemplation in, and desire of the thing,
without any consideration of its attainment. Locke.

TO VELLICATE. v. s. [vellicare, Latin.]
To twitch; to pluck; to act by *stimu-

where a rent can be had. Mortimer.

6. [from vente, Fr. venditio, Lat.] Sale.
For the mart, it was alledged that the vent for English cloths would hereby be open in all times of war. Hayward.

It is this way there is no rent for any commodity
but of wood. Thompson.

He drew off a thousand copies of a treatise, which not one in three score can number, can hardly exceed the rent of that number. Pope.

TO VENT. v. a. [from venter, Fr. from the noun;
ventare, Italian.]

1. To let out at a small aperture.
2. To let out; to give way to.

Hunger broke stone walls; that the gods sent not Corn for the rich men only; with these threats
They vented their complainings. Shaksp.

When men are young, and have little else to do, they might vent the overflowings of their fancy that way. Dickens.

Lab'ring still, with endless discontent,
The queen of heav'n did thus her fury vent. Dryd.

3. To utter; to report.
Had it been vented and imposed in some of the most learned ages, it might then, with some presence of reason, have been said to be the invention of some crafty statesman. Stephens.

4. To emit; to pour out.
Revoke thy doom,
Or, whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou dost evil. Shaksp.

1. The stomach.

Whether I will or not, while I live, my heart beats, and my ventricle digests what is in it. Hale.

2. Any small cavity in an animal body, particularly those of the heart. Know'st thou how blood, which to the heart doth flow,

Doth from one ventricle to the other go? Donne.

The heart being a muscular part, the sides are composed of two orders of fibres running spirally from base to top, contrarily one to the other; and so being drawn or contracted, contringe the ventricles, and strongly force out the blood. Ray.

The mixture of blood and chyle, after its circulation through the lungs, being brought back into the left ventricle of the heart, is drove again by the heart into the aorta, through the whole arterial system. Arbuthnot.

VENTRILOQUIST. n. f. [ventriloquus, Fr. venter and loquor, Lat.] One who speaks in such a manner as that the sound seems to issue from his belly.

VENTURE. n. f. [aventure, Fr.]

1. A hazard; an undertaking of chance and danger.

When he reads Thy personal venture in the rebel's fight, His wonders and his praises do contend Which should be thine or his. Shakespeare.

For a man to doubt whether there be any hell, and thereupon to live so as if absolutely there were none; but when he dies to find himself confuted in the flames, this must be the height of woe and disappointment, and a bitter conviction of an irrational venture and absurd choice. South.

I, in this venture, double gains pursue, And laid out all my stock to purchase you. Dryden. When infinite happiness is put in one scale, against infinite misery in the other; if the worst that comes to the pious man, if he mistakes, be the best that the wicked can sustain to; if he be in the right, who can, without madness, run the venture? Locke.

2. Chance; hap.

The king resolved with all speed to assist the rebels, and yet with that providence and surety as should leave little to venture or fortune. Bacon.

3. The thing put to hazard; a stake.

My ventures are not in one bottom trusted, Nor to one place. Shakespeare.

On such a full sea are we now afloat; And we must take the current when it serves, Or lose our ventures. Shakespeare.

Thrice happy you, that look as from the shore, And have no venture in the wreck to see. Daniel.

4. At a VENTURE. At hazard; without much consideration; without any thing more than the hope of a lucky chance.

You have made but an estimate of these lands at a venture, so as it should be hard to build any certainty of charge upon it. Spenser.

A bargain at a venture made Between two partners in a trade, Hudibras.

A covetous and an envious man joined in a petition to Jupiter, who ordered Apollo to tell them that their desire should be granted at a venture. L'Estrange.

Here was no scampering away at a venture, without fear or wit. L'Estrange.

If Allah be designed for death, though a soldier in the enemy's army draws a bow at a venture, yet the sure unerring directions of providence shall carry it in a direct course to his heart. South.

To VENTURE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dare.

A man were better rise in his suit; for he that would have ventured at first to have lost the suit, will not in the conclusion lose both the suit and his own former favour. Bacon.

Origen mentioning their being cast out of Jerusalem, ventures to assure them that they would never be re-established, since they had committed that horrid crime against the Saviour of the world. Addison.

2. To run a hazard.

Not is indeed that man less mad than those, Who freight a ship to venture on the seas, With one frail interposing plank to save From certain death, roll'd on by every wave. Dryden.

I am so overjoy'd, I can scarce believe I am at liberty; like a bird that has often beaten her wing in vain against her cage, dare hardly venture out, though the fee it open. Dryden.

3. To VENTURE at.

To VENTURE on or upon. } To engage attempts without any security of success, upon mere hope.

That slander is found a truth now; and held for certain,

The king will venture at it. Shakespeare.

It were a matter of great profit, save that it is too conjectural to venture upon, if one could discern what corn, herbs, or fruits are like to be in plenty and scarcity, by some signs in the beginning of the year. Bacon.

I never yet the tragick strain essay'd, Deterr'd by that inimitable maid: And when I venture at the comic style, Thy scornful lady seems to mock my toil. Waller.

Though they had ideas enough to distinguish gold from a stone, yet they but humorously ventured on such terms as aurietas and faxetas. Locke.

Turco-Papismus I would desire him to read, before he ventures at capping of characters. Atterbury.

To VENTURE. v. a.

1. To expose to hazard.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft, I shot his fellow of the self-same flight; By vent'ring both, I oft found both. Shakespeare.

2. To put, or send on a venture.

The fifth ventured for France they pack in stanch hogheads, so as to keep them in their pickle. Carew.

VENTURER. n. f. [from venture.] He who ventures.

VENTUROUS. adj. [from venture.] Bold; daring.

VENTUROUSLY. adv. In a bold or daring manner.

VENTUROUS. adj. [from venture.] Daring; bold; fearless; ready to run hazards.

Charles was guided by mean men, who would make it their master-piece of favour to give venturesome counsels, which no great or wise man would. Bacon.

He pans'd not, but with vent'rous arm He pluck'd, he tast'd. Milton. Columbus having led the way, was seconded by Americus Vesputius, an old venturesome Florentine. Heylin.

The vent'rous humour of our mariners costs this island many brave lives every year. Temple. Savage pirates seek, through seas unknown, The lives of others, vent'rous of their own. Pope.

VENTUROUSLY. adv. [from venturesome.] Daringly; fearlessly; boldly.

'Siege was laid to the fort, by the Lord Gray, then deputy, with a smaller number than there were within the fort; vent'rously indeed; but haste was made to attack them before the rebels came in to them. Bacon.

VENTUROUSNESS. n. f. [from venturesome.] Boldness; willingness to hazard.

Her coming into a place where the walls and ceilings were whitened over, much offended her sight, and made her repent her vent'rous journey. Bayly.

VENUS' bufin. [Jufucus major, Lat.]

VENUS' comb. [pecten Veneris, Lat.]

VENUS' hair. [adiantum.]

VENUS' looking-glass.

VENUS' navel-wort.

VERACIOUS. adj. [verax, Lat.] Obedient of truth.

VERACITY. n. f. [verax, Lat.]

1. Moral truth; honesty of report.

2. Physical truth; consistency of report with fact. Less proper.

When they submitted to the most ignominious and cruel deaths rather than retract their testimony, there was no reason to doubt the veracity of those facts which they related. Addison.

VERB. n. f. [verbe, Fr. verbum, Lat.] A part of speech signifying existence, or some modification thereof, as action, passion. And withal some disposition or intention of the mind relating thereto, as of affirming, denying, interrogating, commanding. Clarke.

Men usually talk of a noun and a verb. Shakespeare.

VERBAL. adj. [verbal, Fr. verbalis, Lat.]

1. Spoken; not written.

2. Oral; uttered by mouth.

Made the no verbal quest? — Yes; once or twice she heav'd the name of father.

Pantingly forth as if it prest her heart. Shakespeare.

3. Consisting in mere words.

If young African for same His wasted country freed from Punick rage, The deed becomes unprais'd the man at least, And loses, though but verbal, his reward. Milton. Being at first out of the way to science, in the progress of their inquiries they must lose themselves, and the truth, in a verbal labyrinth. Glanville.

It was such a denial or confession of him as would appear in preaching; but this is managed in words and verbal profession. South.

4. Verbose; full of words. Out of use.

I am sorry

You put me to forget a lady's manners. Shakespeare.

By being so verbal.

5. Minutely exact in words.

Noted the rules each word-book lays,
For not to know some things is to praise.
6. LITERAL, having words according to words.
Whoever offers at verbal translation, shall have the misfortune of that young traveller, who lost his own language abroad, and brought home no other instead of it.

The verbal copier is incumber'd with so many difficulties at once, that he can never disentangle himself from all.

7. [verbal, Fr. in grammar.] A verbal noun is a noun derived from a verb.
VERBALITY, n. f. [from verbal.] Mere words; bare literal expression.

Sometimes it will seem to be charmed with words of holy scriptures, and to fly from the letter and dead verbatim, who must only start at the life and animated materials thereof.

VERBALLY, adv. [from verbal.]

1. In words; orally.
The manner of our denying the deity of Christ here prohibited, was by words and oral expressions verbally to deny it.

2. Word for word.

'Tis almost impossible to translate verbally, and
well, at the same time.

VERBATIM, adv. [Latin.] Word for word.

Think not, although in writing I prefer'd
The master of thy vile outrageous crimes,
That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able Verbatim to rehearse the method of my pen.

See the transcripts of both charters verbatim in Mat. Paris.

To VERBERATE, v. a. [terbero, Latin.]
To beat; to strike.

VERBERATION, n. f. [verberation, Fr.
from verberate.] Blows; beating.

Riding or walking against great winds is a great exercise, the effects of which are redness and inflammation; all the effects of a soft press or verber-ation.

VERBOSE, adj. [verbosus, Lat.] Exuberant in words; prolix; tedious by multiplicity of words.

Ill judging and verbose, from Lethe's lake
Drew thus unmeasurable.

They ought to be brief, and not too verbose in their way of speaking; and to propound the matter of their argument in a mild and gentle manner.

VERBOSITY, n. f. [verbosité, Fr. from verbosus.] Exuberance of words; much empty talk.

He draweth out the thread of his verbosity
Finer than the staple of his argument.

To give an hint more of the verbosities of this philosophy, a short view of a definition or two will be sufficient evidence.

Homer is guilty of verbosity, and of a tedious pro-lix manner of speaking; he is the greatest talker of all antiquity.

VERDANT, adj. [verdant, Fr. verdans, Lat.] Green. This word is so lately naturalized, that Skinner could find it only in a dictionary.

Each odorous bushy shrub
Fenc'd up by the verdant wall.

VERDIER, n. f. [verdier, Fr. viridarius, low Lat.] An officer in the forest.

VERDICT, n. f. [verum dictum, Lat.]

1. The determination of the jury declared to the judge.

Before the jury go together, 'tis all something what the verdict shall be.
They have a longing desire to overrule, and to have the verdict pass for them, be it right or wrong.

2. Declaration; decision; judgment; opinion.

Deceived greatly they are, who think that all they whose names are cited among the authors of this work, has to say such things as are to be found in the works of the authors.

They were sometimes condemned by the last natural verdict of common humanity; and so very gross and foul, that no man could pretend ignorance avoided.

A very likely matter, indeed, that the emperor should ask the Arias, whether they would be true by the verdict of those who had before condemned the Arias by name.

VERDIGRINE, n. f. The rust of brass, which in time being consumed and eaten with tallow, turneth into green; in Latin arrugo; in French vert de gris, or the hoary green.

Brass turned into green, is called verdigrise.

VERDITER, n. f. Chalk made green.
Verditer ground with a weak gum arabic water,
is the finest and palest green.

VERDURE, n. f. [verdure, Fr.] Green;
green colour.

Its verdure clad
Her universal face with placid green.

Let twined olive bind those laurels fast,
Whose verdure must for ever last.

VERDURIOUS, adj. [from verdure.] Green; covered with green; decked with green.

Higher than their tops
The verdurous wall of paradise upspring;
Which to our general fire gave prospect large.

There the lowing herds chew verdurous pasture.

VERECUND, adj. [verecund, old Fr. ve-recundus, Lat.] Modest; bashful.

VERGE, n. f. [verge, Fr. verga, Lat.]

1. A rod, or something in form of a rod, carried as an emblem of authority.

The mace of a dean.
Suppote him now a dean compleat,
Devoutly belling in his seat.

The silver verge, with decent pride,
Stuck underneath his cushion side.

2. [vergo, Lat.] The brink; the edge;
the utmost border.

Would the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel to fear me to the brain.

I say, and will in battle prove,
Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge
That ever was survey'd by English eye.

You are old
Nature in you stands on the very verge
Of her continuance.

Serve thy us a flow'ry verge to land
The fluid founts of that same wat'ry cloud,
Lest it again dissolve, and flow'r the earth

Let fortune empty her whole quiver on me,
I have a foul, that, like an ample shield,
Can take in all, and verge enough for more.

Every thing great, within the verge of nature, or out of it, has a proper part assigned it in this poem.

Then let him chuse a damsel young and fair,
To bless his age, and bring a worthy heir
To sooth his care, and free from noise and strife,
Conduct him gently to the verge of life.

3. In law.

Verge is the compass about the king's court, bounding the jurisdiction of the lord steward of the king's household, and of the coroner of the king's house, and which seem to have been 12 miles round.

Verge hath also another signification, and is used for a stick, or rod, whereby one is admitted tenant, and, holding it in his hand, sweareth fealty to the lord of the manor; who, for that reason, is called tenant by the verge.

Fear not; whom we raise,
We will make fall within a hallow'd verge.

To VERGE, v. n. [vergo, Lat.] To tend;
to bend downward.

They serve in the present for several respects;
no less, and for comfort, in respect of the page-appeal; and so much the more verging either way, according to the respective occasions.

The nearer I find myself coming to that period of life which is to be labour and sorrow, the more I poop myself upon those low supports that are left.

Such are indicated, when the juices of a human body verge to putrefaction.

Perhaps, as I second to some sphere unknown;
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal.
'Tis but a part we see, and not the whole.

VERGUE, n. f. [from verge.] He that carries the mace before the dean.

I can tip the verge with his own hand,
into the best feat.

VERIDICAL, adj. [from veritas.] Test-ling truth.

VERIFICATION, n. f. [from verify.] Confirmation by argument or evidence.

In verification of this we will mention a phrenomenon of our engine.

VERIFIER, n. f. [from verify.] One who assures a thing to be true.

To VERIFY, v. n. [verifier, Fr.] To justify against charge of falsehood; to confirm; to prove true.

What seemeth to have been uttered concerning sermons, and their efficacy or necessity, in regard of divine matter, must consequently be verified in fundry other kinds of teaching, if the matter be the same in all.

This is verified by a number of examples, that whatsoever is gained by an abusive treaty ought to be restored.

So shalt thou best fulfil, best verify
The prophets old, who sing thy endless reign.

So spake this oracle, then verified,
When Jesus, son of Mary, second Eve,
Saw Satan fall.

Though you may mistake a year;
Though your prognosticks run too fast,
They must be verify'd at last.

Spain shall have three kings; which is now wonderfully verified; for besides the king of Portugal
there are now two rivals for Spain.

VERITY, adv. [from very.]

1. In truth; certainly.

Verity's better to be lowly born,
Than to be peck'd up in a glittering grief.

2. With great confidence.

It was truly thought, that had it not been for four great disavours of that voyage, the enterprise had succeeded.

By repeating the sacramental test, we are verily persuaded the consequence will be an entire alteration of religion among us.

VERISIMILAR, adj. [verisimilis, Lat.]

VERISIMILIOUS, adj. [from verisimilis.] Probable; likely.

Many erroneous doctrines of philosophers are,
in our days, wholly supported by verisimilious and probable reasons.

VERISIMILITUDE, n. f. [verisimilitudo, VERISIMILITY, Lat.] Probability; likelihood; resemblance of truth.

Touching the verisimilitude or probable truth of this relation, several reasons seem to overthrow it.

A noble nation, upon whom if not such virtues,
at least such verisimilitudes of fortitude were placed.

Verisimilitude and opinion are an easy purchase, but true knowledge is dear and difficult. Like a point, it requires an acuteness to its discovery.
while verisimilitude, like the expanded superficies, is obvious, sensible, and affords a large and easy field for loose enquiry.

The plot, the wit, the characters, the passions, are exalted as high as the imagination of the poet can carry them, with proportion to verisimilitude.

Though Horace gives permission to painters and poets to dare every thing, yet he encourages neither to make things out as nature and verities.

V E R

VERITABLE. adj. [veritable, Fr.] True; agreeable to fact.

Indeed! is't true?
—Must veritable; therefore look to't well.

The preface of the year succeeding made from
in oak apples, is I doubt too indistinct, nor veritable from event.

VERITABLY. adv. [from veritable.] In a true manner.

VERITY. n. f. [veritas, Fr., veritas, Lat.]
1. Truth; consonance to the reality of things.

If any refuse to believe us disputing for the verity of things, let them believe God himself, who is the source of all truth.
I saw more of the verity; there was a noise;
there was a drawing; there was a noise;
there was a drawing.

The preface of the year succeeding made from
in oak apples, is I doubt too indistinct, nor veritable from event.

It is a proposition of eternal verity, that none can govern while he is defunct. We may as well imagine that there may be a king without majesty, a supreme without sovereignty.

2. A true assertion; a true tenet.

And that age, which my grey hairs make seem more than it is, hath not diminished in me the power to protect an undeniable verity.

Wherefore should any man think, but that reading itself is one of the ordinary means, whereby it pleaseth God, of his gracious goodness, to fulfil that colossal verity, which being but so received, is nevertheless effectual to save souls?

If there come truth from them,
Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well?

Muti virtue be professed by a lie?
Virtue and truth do ever best agree;
By this it seems to be a verity.

Since the effects to good and virtuous be.

3. Moral truth; agreement of the words with the thoughts.

VERJUICE. n. f. [verjus, French.] Acid liquor expressed from crab-apples. It is vulgarly pronounced vargis.

Hang a dog upon a crab-tree, and he'll never love verjuice.

The barley-pudding comes in place:
Then bids fall on; himself, for saving charges,
A peel'd sic'd onion cuts, and tupples verjuice.

The native verjuice of the crab, deriv'd
Through th' infid' gosh, a grateful mixture forms
Of tart and sweet.

VERMICELLI. n. f. [Italian.] A paste rolled and broken in the form of worms.

With oysters, eggs, and vermicelli,
She let him almost burst his belly.

VERMICULAR. adj. [vermiculus, Latin.] Acting like a worm; continued from one part to another of the same body.

By the vermicular motion of the intestines, the grosser part are deriv'd downwards, while the finer are squeezed into the narrow orifices of the lacteal vessels.

TO VERMICULATE. v. a. [vermiculatus, Fr., vermiculatus, Lat.] To inlay; to work in chequer work, or pieces of divers colours.

VERMICULATION. n. f. [from vermicu-latus.] Continuation of motion from one part to another.

My heart moves naturally by the motion of palpitation; my guts by the motion of vermiculation.

VERMICULE. n. f. [vermiculus, Fr., vermiculus, Lat.] A little grub, worm.

V E R

I saw the shining oak-ball ichneumon strike its terebro into an oak-apple, to lay its eggs therein;
and hence are many vermicules seen to issue outside of these apples.

VERMICULOUS. adj. [vermiculosus, Lat.]
Full of grubs; resembling grubs.

VERMIFORM. adj. [vermiforme, Fr., ver-mis and formo, Lat.] Having the shape of a worm.

VERMIFUGE. n. f. [from vermis and fugo, Lat.] Any medicine that destroys or expels worms.

VERMIL. n. f. [vermeil, vermilion,
French.]

1. The cochineal; a grub of a particular plant.

2. Factitious or native cinnabar; sulphur mixed with mercury. This is the usual, though not primitive, signification.
The imperfect metals are subject to rust, except mercury, which is made into vermilion by solution or calcination.

The fairest and most principal red is vermilion, called in Latin minium. It is a poison, and found where great store of quicksilver is.

3. Any beautiful red colour.

How the red roses flush up in her cheeks,
And the pure snow with goodly vermilion stain,
Like crimson dy'd in grain.

There grew a goodly tree him fair beside,
Loaded with fruit and apples robe red,
As they in pure vermilion had been dy'd.

Whereof great virtues over all were read,
Simple colours are strong and sensible, though they are clear as vermilion.

TO VERMILION. v. a. [from the noun.]
To die red.

A slightly red vermilion all her face,
And her eyes lustrous with unusual grace.

VERMIN. n. f. [vermin, Fr., vermis,
Latin.]

1. Any noxious animal. Used commonly for small creatures.

What is your study?
—How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin.

The head of a wolf, dried and hanged up in a dove-house, will scare away vermin, such as weasels and polecats.

An idle person only lives to spend his time, and eat the fruits of the earth, like a vermin or a wolf.

A weasel taken in a trap was charged with mis-demour, and the poor vermin stood much upon her innocence.

Great injuries these vermin, mice and rats, do in the field.

He that has so little wit
To nourish vermin, may be hit.

2. It is used in contempt of human beings.
The stars determine
You are my prisoners, base vermin.

TO VERMINATE. v. n. [from vermin.]
To breed vermin.

VERMINATION. n. f. [from verminate.]
Generation of vermin.

Redi discarding anomalous generation, tried experiments relating to the vermination of serpents and fleas.

VERMINOUS. adj. [from vermin.] Tending to vermin; disposed to breed vermin.

A wasting of children's flesh depends upon some obstruction of the entrails, or verminous disposition of the body.

VERMIPAROUS. adj. [vermis and pario, Lat.] Producing worms.

Hereby they contound the generation of vermi-parous animals with oviparous.

VERNACULAR. adj. [vernaculus, Lat.]
Native; of one's own country.

V E R

London weekly bills number deep in c tions; the same, twice proving inseparable accidents to most other diseases; which influences do evidently bring a consumption under the notion of a vermicular disease to England.

The histories of all our former wars are translated to us in our vernacular idiom. I do not find in any of our chronicles, that Edward the third ever reconquered the enemy, though he often discovered the posture of the French, and as often vanquished them.

VERNAL. adj. [vernus, Lat.] Belonging to the spring.

With the year
Seasons return; but not to me returns,
Or light of vernal bloom, or summer's rose.

VERNANT. adj. [vernans, Lat.] Flourishing as in the spring.

Else had the spring
Perpetual smil'd on earth, with vernal flowers,
Equal in days and nights.

VERNALITY. n. f. [verna, Lat.] Servile carriage; the submissive sawing behaviour of a slave.

VERSABILITY. n. f. [versabilis, Lat.] Aptness to be turned or wound any way.

VERBAL. adj. [a cant word for universal]
Total; whole.

Some, for brevity,
Have cast the verbal world's nativity.

VERSATILE. adj. [versatilis, Lat.]
1. That may be turned round.

The adventurous pilot in a single year Learn'd his slate cock-boat dextrously to steer, Versatile, and sharp-piercing like a new,
Made good th' old passage, and still bore'd a new

2. Changeable; variable.
One colour to us standing in one place, had contrary aspect in another; as in those secret representations in the neck of a dove, and scarlet scarlet.

3. Easily applied to a new task.
VERSATILENESS. n. f. [from versatile] VERSATILITY. n. f. The quality of being versatile.

of sounds, and number of syllable
Thou halt by moonlight at her window sing,
With feigning voice, verses of feigning love.

2. [verset, Fr.] A section or paragraph of a book.

Thus far the questions proceed upon the construction of the first earth; in the following verse they proceed upon the demolition of that earth.

3. Poetry; lays; metrical language.
Verses embalm virtue, and tombs and thrones
of rhymes,
Preserve frail transitory fame as much
As spice doth body from air's corrupt touch. Dost
If envious eyes their hurtful rays have cast,
More powerful verse shall free thee from the blast.

Whilst she did her various pow'r dispose,
Virtue was taught in verse, and Athens' glory rose.

You compose
In splay-foot verse, or hobbling prose.

4. A piece of poetry.
This verse, my friend, be thine.

TO VERSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To tell verse; to relate poetically.

Shape of Corin state all day,
Pipes of corn, and verse of love.

TO VERSE. v. n. [versor, Lat.] To be skilled in; to be acquainted with.

She might be ignorant of their nations, who not versed in their names, as not being present at the general theory of the world, which is often assigned into every one's hands, and is often used as a common place.

This word is in itself, the infernal knight relates, And then for proof submit their common fate.

VERSEMAN. n. s. [verser and man.] A poet; a writer in verse. In ludicrous language.

The god of us performers, you know, child, the fun.

From limbs of this great Hercules are fram'd Whole groups of pigmies, who are versemen nam'd.

VERSICLE. n. s. [versiculus, Latin.] A little verse.

VERIFICATION. n. s. [verification, Fr. from verfify.] The art or practice of making verses.

Dante alone had your talent, but was not happy to arrive at your verification.

Some object to his verification; which is in poetry, what colouring is in painting, a beautiful ornament. But if the proportions are just, though the colours should happen to be rough, the piece may be of inestimable value.

VERIFICATOR. n. s. [verificator, Fr. verifier.] A verifier; a maker of verses with or without the spirit of poetry.

Statius, the best verifier next Virgil, knew not how to design after him.

In Job and the Psalms we shall find more sublime ideas, more elevated language, than in any of the heathen verifiers of Greece or Rome.

TO VERIFY. v. n. [verfifier, Fr. verfifier, Lat.] To make verses.

You would wonder to hear how soon even children will begin to verify.

To follow rather the Goths in rhyming, than the Greeks in true verifying, were even to eat acorns with swine, when we may freely eat wheat bread among men.

I'll verify in spite, and do my best, To make as much waste paper as the rest.

TO VERIFY. v. a. To relate in verse.

Uninterrupt'd with fictitious fables, I'll verify the truth, not poetize.

VERSION. n. s. [verfion, Fr. versio, Lat.]

1. Change; transformation. Springs, the antients thought to be made by the version of air into water.

2. Change of direction. Comets are rather gazed upon, than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comet, its magnitude, colour, position of the beams, produce what kind of effects.

3. Translation. This exact propriety of Virgil I particularly regarded; but must confess, that I have not been able to make him appear wholly like himself. For where the original is close, no version can reach it in the same compass.

It will be as easy, nay much easier, to invent some pretence or other against the reading, version, or construction.

4. The act of translating.

VERT. n. s. [vert, Fr.]

Vert, in the laws of the forest, signifies every thing that grows, and bears a green leaf within the forest, that may cover and hide a deer.

I find no mention in all the records of Ireland, of a park or free warren, notwithstanding the great plenty of vert and venison.

VERTICAL. adj. [from verticillus, Latin.]

Relating to the joints of the spine.

The carotid, vertebral, and splenic arteries are not only variously connected, but here and there interlaced, to moderate the motion of the blood.

VERTEBRE. n. s. [vertebre, Fr. vertebra, Lat.] A joint of the back.

The several vertebrae are so slightly connected together, that they are as strong as if they were but one bone.

VERTEX. n. s. [Latin.]

1. Zenith; the point over head.

These keep the vertex; but betwixt the bear And shining sodiack, where the planets err, A thousand star'd constellations roll.

2. A top of a hill; the top of any thing. Mountains especially abound with different species of vegetables; every vertex or eminence affording new kinds.

VERTICAL. adj. [vertical, Fr. from vertex.]

1. Placed in the zenith.

'Tis raging noon; and vertical the sun Darts on the head direct his forceful rays.

2. Placed in a direction perpendicular to the horizon.

From these laws, all the rules of bodies ascending or descending in vertical lines may be deduced.

VERTICALITY. n. s. [from vertical.]

The state of being in the zenith.

Unto them the sun is vertical twice a year, making two distinct summers in the different points of the verticality.

VERTICALLY. adv. [from vertical.] In the zenith.

Although it be not vertical unto any part of Asia, yet it vertically passeth over Peru and Brazil.

VERTICILLATE. adj. [from verticillum, Latin.]

Verticillate plants are such as have their flowers intermixt with small leaves growing in a kind of whorls about the joints of a stalk, as pennyroyal, horehound, &c.

VERTICITY. n. s. [from vertex.] The power of turning; circumvolution; rotation.

Those stars do not peculiarly glance on us, but carry a common regard unto all countries, unto whom their verticity is also common.

We believe the verticity of the needle, without a certificate from the days of old.

Whether they be globules, or whether they have a verticity about their own centers, that produce the idea of whiteness in us, the more particles of light are reflected from a body, the whiter does the body appear.

VERTIGINOUS. adj. [vertiginosus, Lat.]

1. Turning round; rotatory.

This vertiginous motion gives day and night successively over the whole earth, and makes it habitable all around.

2. Giddy.

These extinguish candles, make the workmen faint and vertiginous; and, when very great, suffocate and kill them.

VERTIGO. n. s. [Lat.] A giddiness; a sense of turning in the head.

Vertigo is the appearance of visible objects that are without motion, as if they turned round, attended with a fear of falling, and a dimness of sight.

The forerunners of an apoplexy are dizziness, vertigo, trembling.

That old vertigo in his head

Will never leave him till he's dead.

VERYAIN. n. s. [veraine, Fr. verbena, Latin.]

A plant.

The light shade flows to work him ill, Therewith the veryain, and her dill,

That hundred witchers of their will, Some frost'ring pot-herbs here and there he found,

Which, cultivated with his daily care, And bru'd with vinegar, were his frugal fare.

VERYAIN mallow. n. s. A plant. It hath the whole habit of the mallow or althoe; but differs from it in having its leaves deeply divided.

VERVAIN. n. s. [vervain, Fr.] A plant tied to a hawk.

VERY. adv. [veray, or vey, Fr. whence veray is ancient English. It has its origin from veris and veris.]

1. True; real.

Why do I pity him, That with his very heart despatch not In very deed, as the Lord liveth, O that in very deed we might behold it!

2. Having any qualities, commonly bad, in an eminent degree; complete; perfect; mere.

Those who had drunk of Circe's cup, were turned into very beasts.

There, where very desolation dwells, By grots and caverns shag'd with horrid shales, She may pass on.

3. To note things emphatically, or eminently.

'Tis an ill office for a gentleman; Especially against his very friend.

Was not my love The verier wag o' th' two?

We can contain ourselves, Were he the veriest antick in the world.

In a facing age, the very knowledge of former times passes but for ignorance in a better dress.

The pictures of our great grandmothers in queen Elizabeth's time, are clothed down to the very wrists, and up to their very chin.

4. Same, emphatically.

Women are as roses, whose fair faces Being once display'd, doth full themselves lose.

The cocks beat the partridge, which he laid to heart; but finding this very cocks cutting one another, he comforted herself.

So catholic a grace is charity, that whatever time is the special opportunity of any other Christian grace, that very time is also the special opportunity of charity.

VERY. adv. In a great degree; in an eminent degree.

The Greek orator was so very famous for this, that his antagonist reading over the oration which had procured his banishment, asked them, if they were so much afflicted by the bare reading of it, how much more they would have been alarmed, had they heard him?

That bold challenge was thought very strange.

TO VESICATE. v. a. [vesica, Lat.] To blister.

Celcius proposes, that all these internal wounds, the external parts be repeated, to make more powerful revulsion from within.

I saw the cuticular vesicated, and shining with a burning heat.

VESICATION. n. s. [from vesica.] Blistering; separation of the cuticle.

I applied some vinegar prepared with litharge, detaching the vesication with plectrets.

VESICATORY. n. s. [vesicatorium, technical Lat.] A blistering medicine.

VESICLE. n. s. [vesicula, Lat.] A small cuticle filled or inflated.

Nor is the humour contained in smaller veins, but in a vesicle, or little bladder.

The lungs are made up of such air pipes and vessels interwoven with blood vessels, to purify, augment, or supply the sanguiferous mass with arterial particles.

VESICULAR. adj. [from vesicula, Lat.]

Hollow; full of small interstices.

A muscle is a bundle of vesicular threads, or of solid filaments, involved in one common membrane.

VESPER. n. s. [Lat.] The evening star; the evening.

These signs are his, & I hope his pageants.

VES

VE'SPERUS. n. f. [without the singular, from vesperus, Lat.] The evening service of the Romish church.

VE'SPERTINE. adj. [vespertinus, Latin.] Happening or coming in the evening; pertaining to the evening.

VE'SSEL. n. f. [vasselle, Fr. vas, Lat.]

1. Any thing in which liquids, or other things, are put.

For Banquo's issue have I fix'd my mind;
Put rancours in the vessel of my peace,
Only for them. Shakespeare.

If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, there still remains one vessel empty. Burnet.

2. The containing parts of an animal body.

Of these elements are constituted the smallest fibres; of those fibres the vessels; of those vessels the organs of the body. Arbutnot.

Another cause of a wasting ulcer in the lungs, is, the disruption of a vessel, whence the blood issues into the cavities and interstices of the lungs, and is thence expectorated by a cough. Blackmore.

3. Any vehicle in which men or goods are carried on the water.

The sons and nephews of Noah, who peopled the seas, had vessels to transport themselves. Raleigh.
The Phœnicians first invented open vessels, and the Egyptians ships with decks. Heylin.

The vessel is represented as stranded. The figure before it seems to lift it off the shallows. Addison.

From storms of rage, and dangerous rocks of pride,

Let thy strong hand this little vessel guide;
It was thy hand that made it: through the tide
Impetuous of this life let thy command
Direct my course and bring me safe to land. Prior.

Now secure the painted vessel glides;
The sun-beams trembling on the floating tides. Pope.

4. Any capacity; any thing containing.

I have my fill
Of knowledge, what this vessel can contain. Milton.

5. [In theology.] One relating to God's household.

If the rigid doctrines be found apt to cool all those men's love of God, who have not the confidence to believe themselves of the number of the few chosen vessels, and to beget security and presumption in others who have conquered those difficulties. Hammond.

TO VE'SSEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a vessel; to barrel.

Take earth, and vessel it, and in that set the feed. Bacon.

VE'SSETS. n. f. A kind of cloth commonly made in Suffolk. Bailey.

VE'SSION. n. f. [among horsemen.] A windgall, or soft swelling on the inside and outside of a horse's hoof. Dart.

VEST. n. f. [vestis, Latin.] An outer garment.

Over his lucid arms
A military vest of purple flow'd. Milton.

When the queen in royal habit's dress,
Old mystick emblems grace th' imperial vest. Smith.

TO VEST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress; to deck; to enrobe.

The verdant fields with those of heav'n may vie,
With either vest, and a purple sky. Dryden.

Light! Nature's resplendent robe;
Without whose vesting beauty all were wrapt
In gloom. Thomson.

2. To dress in a long garment.

Just Simon and prophetic Anna spoke,
Before the altar and the vested priest. Milton.

3. To make possessor of; to invest with:
it has with before the thing possessed.

To settle men's consciences, 'tis necessary that they know the person who by right is vested with power over them. Locke.

VET

Had I been vested with the monarch's pow'r,
Thou must have fight'd, unlucky youth! in vain. Prior.

4. To place in possession: with is before the possessor.

The militia their commissioners positively required to be entirely vested in the parliament. Clarendon.

Empire and dominion was vested in him, for the good and behoof of others. Locke.

VE'STAL. n. f. [vestalis, Lat.] A virgin consecrated to Vesta; a pure virgin.

Women are not
In their best fortunes strong; but want will perjure
The ne'er-touch'd vestal. Shakespeare.

How happy is the blameless vestal's lot!
The world forgetting, by the world forgot. Pope.

VE'STAL. adj. [vestalis, Lat.] Denoting pure virginity.

Her vestal livery is but sick and green,
And none but fools do wear it. Shakespeare.

VE'STIBULE. n. f. [vestibulum, Latin.]

The porch or first entrance of a house.

VE'STIGE. n. f. [vestigium, Lat.] Footstep; mark left behind in passing.

The truth passes so slightly through men's imaginations, that they must use great subtilty to track its vestige. Harvey.

VE'STMENT. n. f. [vestimentum, Latin.] Garment; part of dress.

Were it not better that the love which men bear unto God should make the least things that are employed in his service amiable, than that their over-scrupulous dislike of so mean a thing as a vestment, should from the very service of God withdraw their hearts and affections? Hooker.

Heaven then would seem thy image, and reflect Those subtle vestments, and that bright aspect. Waller.

The sculptors could not give vestments suitable to the quality of the persons represented. Dryden.

VE'STRY. n. f. [vestiaire, Fr. vestiarium, Latin.]

1. A room appendant to the church, in which the sacerdotal garments and consecrated things are deposited.

Bold Amycus from the robb'd vestry brings
The chalices of heav'n; and holy things
Of precious weight. Dryden.

2. A parochial assembly commonly convened in the vestry.

They create new vestryors, vestry elders, without any commendment of the world. White.

The common-council are chosen every year, so many for every parish, by the vestry and common convention of the people of that parish. Clarendon.

Go with me where paltry constables will not summon us to vestries. Blount.

VE'STURE. n. f. [vesture, old Fr. vestura, Italian.]

1. Garment; robe.

Her breasts half hid, and half were laid to show;
Her envious vesture greedy sight repelling. Fairif.

What, weep you when you but behold
Our Cæsar's vesture wounded? Shakespeare.

To bear my lady's train, lest the base earth
Should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss. Shaks.

Here ruddy bras and gold resplendent blas'd;
There polish'd chests embroder'd vestures grac'd. Pope.

2. Dress; habit; external form.

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings;
But this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly close us in, we cannot hear it. Shakespeare.

Rocks, precipices, and gulfs, apparel'd with a vesture of plants, would resemble mountains and vallies. Bentley.

VETCH. n. f. [vicia, Lat.] A plant with a papilionaceous flower, producing a legume.

VEX

Where vetches, pulse, and tares have sown,
And stalks of lupines grow. Dryden.

An ervum is a sort of vetch, or small pea. Arbutnot.

VE'TCHY. adj. [from vetch.] Made of vetches; abounding in vetches; consisting of vetch or pea-straw.

If to my cottage thou wilt resort,
There may'st thou linge in a vetchy bed,
Till fairer fortune shew forth his head. Spenser.

VE'TERAN. n. f. [veteranus, Lat.] An old soldier; a man long practised in any thing.

The Ariens, for the credit of their faction, took the eldest, the best experienced, the most wary, and the longest practised veterans they had amongst them. Harley.

If king Charles II. had made war upon France, he might have conquered it by the many veterans which had been inured to service in the civil wars. Addison.

Ensigns that pierc'd the foe's remotest lines,
The hardy veteran with tears resigns. Addison.

We were forced to uncover, or be regarded as veterans in the bear monde. Addison.

VE'TERAN. adj. Long practised in war, long experienced.

There was a mighty strong army of land-forces, to the number of fifty thousand veteran soldiers. Hume.

The British youth shall find thy wife command,
Thy temper'd ardour, and thy veteran skill. Tomlin.

VETERINARIAN. n. f. [veterinarius, Lat.] One skilled in the diseases of cattle.

That a horse has no gall, is not only swallowed by common farriers, but also received by god veterinarians, and some who have laudably courted upon horses. Brace.

TO VEX. v. a. [vexo, Lat.]

1. To plague; to torment; to harass.

Do you think
The king will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd? Shakspeare.

Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes. Shakspeare.

When she pressed him daily, to that his love was vexed unto death, he told her all his heart. Jonson.

Still may the dog the wand'ring troops constrain
Of airy ghosts, and vex the guilty train. Dryden.

You are the cause of all my care
Your eyes ten thousand dangers dart,
Ten thousand torments vex my heart;
I love, and I despair. Pope.

2. To disturb; to disquiet.

Alack, 'tis he; why, he was met even now,
As mad as the west sea, singing aloud. Shakspeare.

Rang'd on the banks, beneath our equal sky,
White curling waves, and the sea's dædal rout. Pope.

3. To trouble with slight provocations.

TO VEX. v. n. To fret; to be on tenter; to be uneasy.

Ulysses gave good care, and fed
And drunk his wine, and rest, and reviv'd
His food for mere vexation. Chapman.

VE'XATION. n. f. [from vex.]

1. The act of troubling.

O that husband,
My supreme crown of grief, and those repeated vexations of it! Shakspeare.

2. The state of being troubled; uneasiness; sorrow.

Vexation almost stops my breath,
That fondred friends greet in the hour of death. Shakspeare.

Passions too violent, instead of heightening our pleasures, afford us nothing but vexation and pain. Temple.

3. The cause of trouble or uneasiness.

Your children were vexation to your youth:
But mine shall be a comfort to your age. Shakspeare.

4. An act of harassing by law.

Albeit the party grieved thereby may have some reason to complain of an untrue charge, yet may he not well call it an unjust vexation. Bacon.

5. A slight teasing trouble.

VEXATIOUS, adj. [from vexation.]

1. Afflictive; troublesome; causing trouble.

Consider him maintaining his usurped title by continual vexations wars against the kings of South.

Vexations thought still found my flying mind,
Nor bound by limits, nor to place confin'd;
Haunted my nights, and terrified my days;
Stalk'd through my gardens, and pursu'd my ways;
Nor shut from artful bow'rs, nor lost in winding maze. Prior.

2. Full of trouble; full of uneasiness.

He leads a vexatious life, who in his noblest actions is so gored with scruples, that he dares not make a step without the authority of another. Digby.

3. Teasing; slightly troublesome.

VEXATIONOUSLY, adv. [from vexatious.]

Troublesomely; uneasily.

VEXATIONOUSNESS, n. f. [from vexatious.]

Troublesomeness; uneasiness.

VEXER, n. f. [from vex.] He who vexes.

UGLY, adv. [from ugly.] Filthily; with deformity; in such a manner as to raise dislike.

UGLINESS, n. f. [from ugly.]

1. Deformity; contrariety to beauty.

All that else seem'd fair and fresh in sight,
Was turn'd now to dreadful ugliness. Spenser.
She takes her topics from the advantages of old age and ugliness. Dryden.

2. Turpitude; loathsomeness; moral depravity.

Their dull ribaldry cannot but be very nauseous and offensive to any one, who does not, for the sake of the sin itself, pardon the ugliness of its circumstances. South.

UGLY, adj. [This word was anciently written ougly; whence Dier ingeniously deduces it from ouphlike; that is, like an ouph, elph, or goblin. In Saxon oga is terrible; and in Gothic ogan is to fear.] Deformed; offensive to the sight; contrary to beautiful; hateful.

It Callio do remain,

He hath a daily beauty in his life,
That makes me ugly. Shakespeare.

O, I have pass'd a miserable night,
So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams. Shakspeare.

Was this the cottage, and the gate above
Thou toldst me of? What grim aspects are there,
These ugly-headed monsters? Milton.

VIAL, n. f. [from vas.] A small bottle.

You gods! look down,
And from your sacred vials pour your grace
Upon my daughter's head. Shakspeare.

Take thou this vial, being then in bed,

And this distilled liquor drink thou off. Shakspeare.

Another lump burn in an old marble sepulchre belonging to some of the ancient Romans inclosed in a glass vial. Walling.

I placed a thin vial, well stopp'd up, within the smoke of the vapour, but nothing followed. Addison.

Chemical waters, that are well transparent,
when separate, ferment into a thick troubled liquor,
when mixed in the same vial. Addison.

TO VIAL, v. a. To enclose in a vial.

This she with precious oil'd liquors heals;
For which the shepherds, at the festivals,
Carol her goodness loud in rustic lays. Milton.

VIALD, n. f. [from viale, French; vivanda, Italian.] Food; meat dressed.

The belly only like a idle reman'd,
I'th' midst of the body idle and unactive;
Still cupboarding the wind. Shakspeare.

No matter, since
They've left their vials behind, for we have flumes.

Will't please you taste of what is here? Shakspeare.

These are not fruits forbidden; no interdiction
Defends the touching of these vials pure;
Their taste no knowledge works, at least of evil. Milton.

From some sorts of food less pleasant to the taste, persons in health, and in no necessity of using such viands, had better to abstain. Ray.

The tables in fair order spread;
Viands of various kinds allure the taste,
Of choicest sort and savour; rich repast. Pope.

VIATICUM, n. f. [Latin.]

1. Provision for a journey.

2. The last rites used to prepare the passing soul for its departure.

TO VIATRARE, v. a. [from viatro, Latin.]

1. To brandish; to move to and fro with quick motion.

2. To make to quiver.

Breath vocalized, that is, vibrated or undulated,
may differently affect the lips, and impress a swift tremulous motion, which breath passing smooth doth not. Holder.

TO VIBRATE, v. n.

1. To play up and down, or to and fro.

The air, compressed by the fall and weight of the quicksilver, would repel it a little upwards, and make it vibrate a little up and down. Boyle.

Do not all fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light, and flame? And is not this emission performed by the vibrating motions of their parts? Newton.

2. To quiver.

The whisper that to greatness still too near,
Perhaps, yet vibrates on his sovereign's ear. Pope.

VIBRATION, n. f. [from vibro, Lat.] The act of moving or state of being moved with quick reciprocations, or returns;
the act of quivering.

It sparkled like the coal upon the altar, with the servants of piety, the heats of devotion, and the flicks and vibrations of an humble activity. South.

Do not the rays of light, in falling upon the bottom of the eye, excite vibrations in the tunica retina? which vibrations being propagated along the solid fibres of the optic nerves into the brain, cause the sense of seeing. Newton.

Mild vibrations sooth the parted soul,
New to the dawning of celestial day. Thomson.

VICAR, n. f. [from vicarius, Latin.]

1. The incumbent of an appropriated or impropriated benefice.

Procure the vicar

To stay for me at church, 'twixt twelve and one,
To give our hearts united ceremony. Shakspeare.

Your is the price,
The vicar my desert, and all the village see. Dryden.

A landed youth, whom his mother would never suffer to look into a book for fear of spoiling his eyes, upon hearing the clergy desired, what a com-tempt must he entertain, not only for his vicar at home, but for the whole order! Swift.

2. One who performs the functions of another; a substitute.

An archbishop may not only excommunicate and interdict his suffragans, but his vicar general may do the same. Aylmer.

VICARAGE, n. f. [from vicar.] The benefice of a vicar.

This gentleman lived in his vicarage to a good old age, and having never defiled his flock, died vicar of Bray. Swift.

VICARIOUS, adj. [from vicarius, Latin.] Deputed; delegated; acting in the place of another.

The soul in the body is but a subordinate efficient, and vicarious and instrumental in the hands of the Almighty, being but his substitute in this regiment of the body. Hale.

What can be more unnatural, than for a man to rebel against the vicarious power of God in his soul? Norris.

VICARSHIP, n. f. [from vicar.] The office
of a vicar.

VICE, n. f. [from vitium, Latin.]

1. The course of action opposite to virtue; depravity of manners; inordinate life.

No spirit more gro'ss to love
Vice for itself. Milton.

The foundation of error will lie in wrong measures of probability; as the foundation of vice in wrong measures of good. Locke.

2. A fault; an offence. It is generally used for an habitual fault, not for a single enormity.

No vice, so simple, but assumes
Some mark of virtue on its outward parts. Shakspeare.

Yet my poor country
Shall have more vices than it had before;
More suffer by him that shall succeed. Shakspeare.

Where the excess and defect do make vices, or such things as ought not to be, there the mediocrity must denote something that ought to be, and consequently must be a virtue. Milton.

I govern'd appetite, a brutish vice.
I cannot blame him for investigating so deeply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryden.

Proud vices and vain desires in our worldly employments, are as truly vices and corruptious, as hypocrisy in prayer, or vanity in alms. Law.

3. The fool, or punchinello of old fables.

I'll be with you again
In a trice, like to the old vice,
Your need to instant. Shakspeare.

Who with dagger of bath, in his rage and his wrath,
Cries, Ah, ha! to the devil. Shakspeare.

His face made of brim, like a vice in a game.
Tupper.

4. [trij, Dutch.] A kind of small iron press with screws, used by workmen.

He found that marbles taught him percussion;
bottle-screws, the vice; whirling, the axis in peri-trochio. Arbuthnot and Pope.

5. Gripe; grasp.

If I but hit him once; if he come but within my vice. Shakspeare.

6. [vice, Latin.] It is used in composition for one, qui vicem gerit, who performs, in his stead, the office of a superior, or who has the second rank in command;
as, a viceroi, vicechancellor.

TO VICE, v. a. [from the noun.] To draw by a kind of violence.

With all confidence he swears,
As he had seen 't, or been an instrument
To see you to 't, that you have touch'd his queen.
Forbiddingly. Shakspeare.

VICEDMIRAL, n. f. [vice and admiral.]

1. The second commander of a fleet.

The far most of the fleet was the admiral; the viceadmiral was Carr Mahomed, an arch-pirate.
The viceadmiral in the middle of the fleet, with a great squadron of galleys, struck sail directly.
Knellet.

2. A naval officer of the second rank.

VICEDMIRALTY, n. f. [from viceadmiral.]

The office of a viceadmiral.

The viceadmiralty is exercised by Mr. Trevelyan.
Carver.

VICAGENT, n. f. [vice and agent.] One who acts in the place of another.

A valiant Satan hath made his vicagent, to cross whenever the faithful ought to do. Hooker.

VICCHANCELLOR, n. f. [from vicechancellor, Latin.] The second magnitude of the universities.

VICED, adj. [from vice.] Vicious; corrupt.
Not used.

Be as a planetary plague, when Love
Will o'er some high vic'd city hang his poison.
In the sick air. Shakspeare.

VICIGERENCY, n. f. [from vicigerent.]

The office of a vicigerent; lieutenantcy;
deputed power.

The authority of conscience stands founded upon its overgenerous and deputation under local South.

VIC

VICEROENT. n. f. [viceregens, Lat.]

A lieutenant; one who is intrusted with the power of the superior, by whom he is deputed.

All precepts concerning kings are comprehended in these: remember thou art a man; remember thou art God's viceregent.

Employ it in unfeigned piety towards God; in unshaken duty to his viceregent; in hearty obedience to his church.

Great Father of the gods, when for our crimes Thou send'st some heavy judgment on the times; Some tyrant king, the terror of his age, The type and true viceregent of thy rage, Thus punish.

VICEROENT. adj. [viceregens, Latin.]

Having a delegated power; acting by substitution.

Whom send I to judge thee? Whom but thee, Viceregent Son! To thee I have transfer'd All judgment, whether in heav'n, or earth, or hell.

VICENARY. adj. [vicenarius, Latin.]

Belonging to twenty.

VICEROY. n. f. [viceroi, French.]

He who governs in place of the king with regal authority.

Shall I, for lure of the rest unvanquish'd, Detract so much from that prerogative, As to be call'd but viceroi of the whole?

Mendoza, viceroi of Peru, was wont to say, that the government of Peru was the best place the king of Spain gave, save that it was somewhat too near Madrid.

We are so far from having a king, that even the viceroi is generally absent four fifths of his time.

VICEROYALTY. n. f. [from viceroi.] Dignity of a viceroi.

These parts furnish our viceroialties for the grandees; but in war are incumbrances to the kingdom.

VICTY. n. f. [Of this word I know not well the meaning or original: a nice thing is now called in vulgar language, point nice, from the French point de ruse, or point de vice; whence the barbarous word victory may be derived.]

Nicety; exactness. A word not used.

Here is to the fruit of Pemm, Grafted upon Stub his stem; With the peaskish nicety.

And old Sherwood's nicety.

VICINAGE. n. f. [vicinia, Lat.]

Neighbourhood; places adjoining.

VICINAL. adj. [vicinus, Latin.]

Near; neighbouring.

Opening other vicine passages might obliterate any track; as the making of one hole in the yielding mud defaces the print of another near it.

VICINITY. n. f. [vicinus, Latin.]

1. Nearness; state of being near.

The position of things is such, that there is a vicinity between agents and patients, that the one incessantly invades the other.

The abundance and vicinity of country feasts.

VICINITY. n. f. [vicinus, Latin.]

2. Neighbourhood.

He shall find out and recall the wandering particles home, and fix them in their old vicinity.

Gravity alone must have carried them downwards to the vicinity of the sun.

VICIOUS. adj. [from vice.] See VITI-ous.

Devoted to vice; not addicted to virtue.

He heard this heavy strife, Servants of servants, on his vicious race.

VICISSITUDE. n. f. [vicissitudo, Latin.]

1. Regular change; return of the same things in the same succession.

VIC

VICISSITUDE. n. f. [vicissitudo, Latin.]

It makes through heav'n's Grateful vicissitude, like day and night. The rays of light are alternately disposed to be reflected or refracted for many vicissitudes.

This succession of things upon the earth, is the result of the vicissitude of seasons, and is as constant as is the cause of that vicissitude, the sun's declination.

2. Revolution; change.

During the course of the war, did the vicissitudes of good and bad fortune affect us with humility or thankfulness.

Verse sweetens toil, however rude the sound. All at her work the village maiden sings; Nor, as she turns the giddy wheel around, Revolves the sad vicissitude of things.

VICINTIENS. In law, vicintiel rents are certain farms for which the sheriff pays a rent to the king, and makes what profit he can of them.

Vicintiel writs are such writs as are triable in the county court, before the sheriff.

VICTIM. n. f. [vicima, Latin.]

1. A sacrifice; something slain for a sacrifice.

All that were authors of so black a deed, Be sacrific'd as victims to his ghost. And on the victim pour the ruddy wine.

Clitumnus' waves, for triumphs after war, The victim ox, and snowy sheep prepare.

2. Something destroyed.

Behold where ege's wretched victim lies; See his head trembling, and his half-clus'd eyes.

VICTOR. n. f. [victor, Latin.]

1. Conqueror; vanquisher; he that gains the advantage in any contest. Victor is seldom used with a genitive; we say the conqueror of kingdoms, not the victor of kingdoms; and never but with regard to some single action or person: as we never say, Cæsar was in general a great victor, but that he was victor at Pharsalia. We rarely say Alexander was victor of Darius, though we say he was victor at Arbela; but we never say he was victor of Persia.

This strange race more strange conceits did yield; Who victor seem'd, was to his ruin brought; Who seem'd o'erthrown, was mistress of the field.

Some time the flood prevails, and then the wind, Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast, Yet neither conqueror, nor conquered. Although the victor, we submit to Cæsar.

Say where and when Their fight; what stroke shall bruise the victor's heel.

Our Hebrew songs and harps in Babylon, That pleas'd so well our victor's ear, declare That rather Greece from us these arts deriv'd.

Their hearts at last the vanquish'd re-assume, And now the victors fall. In love, the victors from the vanquish'd fly; They fly that wound, and they pursue that die.

Fortune's unjust; the ruins of the brave, And him who should be victor, makes the slave.

Loose not a thought on me, I'm out of danger; Heaven will not leave me in the victor's hand.

2. Pope has used this word in a manner perhaps unauthorized.

There, victor of his health, his fortune, friends, And fame, this lord of useless thousands ends.

VICTORIOUS. adj. [victoriosus, French.]

1. Conquering; having obtained conquest; superiour in contest.

Victory doth more often fall by error of the vanquish'd, than by the valour of the victorious.

VIE

The Sea returns'd victorious with his ships.

That happy fun, said he, will rise again, Who twice victorious did our navy see: And I alone must view him rise in vain, Without one ray of all his star for me.

2. Producing conquest.

Sudden these honours shall be snatch'd away, And cut for ever this victorious day.

3. Betokening conquest.

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths; Our bruised arms hung up for monuments.

VICTORIOUSLY. adv. [from victoriosus.] With conquest; successfully; triumphantly.

That grace will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, victoriously through all difficulties.

VICTORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from victoriosus.]

The state or quality of being victorious.

VICTORY. n. f. [victoria, Lat.]

Conquest; success in contest; triumph. At his nurse's tears

He whin'd and roar'd away your victory, That pages blush'd at him.

Then to the heaven of heavens he shall ascend, With victory, triumphing o'er his foes.

Obedience is a complicated act of virtue, and many graces are exercised in one act of obedience. It is an act of humility, of mortification, and redemption, of charity to God, of care of the publick, of order and charity to ourselves. It is a great instance of a victory over the most refractory passions.

VICTRESS. n. f. [from victor.]

A female that conquers. Not used.

I'll lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed; And she shall be sole victress; Cæsar's wife.

VICTUAL. } n. f. [victualles, French, vittionaglia, Italian.]

Provision of food; stores for the support of life; meat; sustenance.

Chapman has written it as it is colloquially pronounced.

He landed in these islands, to furnish himself with victuals and fresh water.

You had musty victuals, and he hath hold to eat it: he hath an excellent stomach.

A huge great flagon full I bore, And, in a good large knapsack, cut the store.

He was not able to keep that place three days for lack of victual.

They, unprovided of tackling and victuals, are forced to sea by a storm.

TO VICTUAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

To store with provision for food.

I must go victual Orleans forthwith.

VICTUALLER. n. f. [from victuals.]

1. One who provides victuals. They planted their artillery against the baren, to impeach supply of victuals; yet the English victuallers surceased not to bring all things needful.

Their conquest half is to the victualler due.

2. One who keeps a house of entertainment.

VIDELICET. adv. [Lat.] To wit; that is. This word is generally written vid.

VIDUITY. n. f. [from viduus, Lat.]

Widowhood.

To VIE. v. a. [Of this word the etymology is very uncertain.]

1. To show or practise in competition. They vie power and expence with those that are too high.

You vie happiness in a thousand easy and sweet diversions.

VIE

9. Is this padding the meaning seems to be, to add; to accumulate.

She hung about my neck, and kiss and kiss she view'd to fall.

That is a trick she won me to her love. Shaksp.
To VIZ. v. n. To contest; to contend; to strive for superiority.

In a trading nation, the younger sons may be placed in such a way of life, as may enable them to rise with the best of their family. Addison.

The wool, when stained with Ancona's dye, May with the proud Tyrian purple vie. Addison.

Now voices over voices rise;
While each to be the loudest vies. Swift.

To VIEW. v. a. [veu, Fr. from veoir, or voir.]

1. To survey; to look on by way of examination.

Go, and view the country. Joshua.

Th' almighty Father bent down his eye,
His own works and their works at once to view. Milton.

View not this spire by measures giv'n
To buildings rais'd by common hands. Prior.

Whene'er we view some well-proportion'd dome,
No single parts unequally surprise;
All comes united to th' admiring eyes. Pope.

2. To see; to perceive by the eye.

They here with eyes aghast

View'd first their lamentable lot. Milton.

No more I hear, no more I view;

The phantom flies me, as unkind as you. Pope.

VIEW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Prospect.

You should tread a course

Pretty, and full of view; yes, haply, near

The residence of Posthumus. Shakspere.

Vast and indefinite views, which drown all apprehensions of the uttermost objects, are condemned by good authors. Wotton.

The walls of Pluto's palace are in view. Dryd.

Cut wide views through mountains to the plain,

You'll with your hill a shelter'd hill again. Pope.

2. Sight; power of beholding.

I go, to take for ever from your view,

Both the lov'd object, and the hated too. Dryden.

These things duly weighed, will give us a clear view into the state of human liberty. Locke.

Instruct me other joys to prize,

With other beauties charm my partial eyes;

Full in my view set all the bright abode,

And make my soul quit Abelard for God. Pope.

3. Intellectual sight; mental ken.

Some safer resolution I've in view. Milton.

4. Act of seeing.

Th' unexpected sound

Of dogs and men, his wakeful ear does wound;

Rous'd with the noise, he scarce believes his ear,

Willing to think th' illusions of his fear

Had giv'n this false alarm; but straight his view

Confirms that more than all he fears is true. Deuham.

5. Sight; eye.

Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote. Locke.

6. Survey; examination by the eye.

Time never will renew,

While we too far the pleasing path pursue,

Surveying nature with too nice a view. Dryden.

7. Intellectual survey.

If the mind has made this inference by finding out the intermediate ideas, and taking a view of the connection of them, it has proceeded rationally. Locke.

8. Space that may be taken in by the eye;

reach of sight.

The flame through all the neighb'ring nations flow, Dryden.

When now the Trojan navy was in view. Dryden.

9. Appearance; show.

In that accomplish'd mind,

Help'd by the night, new graces find;

Which, by the splendour of her view

Dazzled, before we never knew. Waller.

VIG

10. Display; exhibition to the sight or mind.

To give a right view of this mistaken part of liberty, would any one be a changeling, because he is less determined by wife considerations than a wife man? Locke.

11. Prospect of interest.

No man sets himself about any thing, but upon some view or other, which serves him for a reason. Locke.

12. Intention; design.

He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees to the state of things at home; with that view he makes all his reflections. Atterbury.

With a view to commerce, in returning from his expedition against the Parthians, he passed through Egypt. Arbutnot.

Either, the Jesuit, in the year 1626, recorded the cardinal in the same place, and upon the same views. Waterland.

VIEWER. n. f. [from view.] One who views.

VIEWLESS. adj. [from view.] Unseen;

not discernible by the sight.

To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,

And blown with restless violence about

The pendant world. Shakspere.

Each star mysteriously was meant, nor flood,

There always, but drawn up to heav'n sometimes

viewless. Milton.

Swift through the viewless valves the visionary soul

Repas'd, and viewless mix'd with common air. Pope.

Light-bounding from the earth, at once they rise;

Their feet half viewless quiver in the skies. Pope.

VIGESIMATION. n. f. [vigesimus, Lat.]

The act of putting to death every twenty tieth man. Bailey.

VIGIL. n. f. [vigilia, Latin.]

1. Watch; devotions performed in the customary hours of rest.

So they in heav'n their odes and vigils tun'd.

Milton.

Shrines! where their vigils pale-eyed virgins

keep,

And pitying saints, whose statues learn to weep. Pope.

2. A fast kept before a holiday.

He that outlives this day, and fees old age,

Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,

And say, to-morrow is St. Crispian. Shakspere.

And that, which on the Baptist's vigil lends

To nymphs and twins the vision of their friends. Harte.

3. Service used on the night before a holiday.

No altar is to be consecrated without reliques, which placed before the church door, the vigils are to be celebrated that night before them. Stillingfleet.

The rivals call my mate another way,

To sing their vigils for th' ensuing day. Dryden.

4. Watch; forbearance of sleep.

Though Venus and her son should spare

Her rebel heart, and never teach her cave;

Yet Hymen may perform her vigils keep,

And for another's joy suspend her sleep. Waller.

Nothing wears out a fine face like the vigils of the card-table, and those cutting passions which attend them. Addison.

VIGILANCE. } n. f. [vigilance, Fr. vigi-

VIGILANCY. } lancia, Lat.]

1. Forbearance of sleep.

Ulysses yielded unreasonably to sleep, and the strong passion for his country should have given him

vigilance. Broome.

2. Watchfulness; circumspection; incessant care.

Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,

Your deeds of war, and all our counsel die? Shaksp.

In this their military care, there were few remarkable occasions under the duke, saving his continual vigilance, and voluntary hazard of his person. Wotton.

Of these the vigilance

I dread; and to elude, thus wrapp'd in mist

Of midnight vapour, glide obscure. Milton.

VIL

We are enabled to subdue all other creatures; and use for our benefit the strength of these, the sagacity and vigilancy of the dog. Ray.

3. Guard; watch.

No post is free, no place,

That guard and moit must attend. Shakspere.

Does not attend my taking. Shakspere.

In at this gate none pass.

The vigilance here plac'd, but such a scene

Well known from heav'n. Shakspere.

VIGILANT. adj. [vigilans, Lat.] Watchful; circumspect; diligent; attentive.

They have many prayers, but every of them very short, as if they were darts thrown out with a kind of sudden quickness; lest that vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, should be waded or dulled through continuance. Hooker.

Take your places, and be vigilant;

If any noise or soldier you perceive,

Let us have knowledge. Shakspere.

The treasurer, as he was vigilant in such cases, had notice of the clerk's expiration so soon, that he procured the king to fund a message to the master of the rolls. Clarendon.

VIGILANTLY. adv. [from vigilant.]

Watchfully; attentively; circumspectly.

Thus in peace, either of the kings so vigilantly observed every motion of the others, as if they had lived upon the alarm. Hayward.

VIGOROUS. adj. [from vigor, Lat.] Forrible; not weakened; full of strength and life.

Fam'd for his valour young;

At sea successful, vigorous and strong! Waller.

Their appetite is not dulled by being gratified, but returns always fresh and vigorous. Atterbury.

Though the beginnings of confederacies have been always vigorous and successful, their progress has been generally feeble, and event unfortunate. Davenant.

VIGOROUSLY. adv. [from vigour.] With force; forcibly; without weakness.

The prince had two giant ships:

With his one to vigorously he press'd,

And flew to home, they could not rise again. Dryden.

If the fire burns bright and vigorously, it is no matter by what means it was at first kindled. South.

That prince whose cause you espouse to vigorously, is the principal in the war, and you but a second. Swift.

VIGOROUSNESS. n. f. [from vigour.]

Force; strength.

He hath given excellent sufferance and vigorousness

to the soldiers, among them with franchise

courage, hardihood, invincible resolution, and glorious patience. Taylor.

VIGOUR. n. f. [vigor, Latin]

1. Force, strength.

Shame to be overcome.

Would utmost vigour raise, and rais'd unite. Milton.

Pernicious fire wither'd all their strength,

And of their wonted vigour left them drain'd. Milton.

The mind and spirit remains

Invincible, and vigour soon returns. Milton.

No deep within her gulf can hold

Immortal vigour. Milton.

The vigour of this arm was never vain:

Wrench these limbs in vigour of slaughter. Dryden.

2. Mental force; intellectual ability.

3. Energy; efficacy.

In the fruitful earth.

His beams, unadvised else, their vigour find. Milton.

How does Caraculus all his sinews strain,

The earth's attractive vigour to explain! Blackmore.

VILE. adj. [vil, Fr. vilis, Latin.]

1. Base; mean; worthless; sordid; despicable.

Our case were miserable, if that wherewith we most endeavour to please God, were in his sight so vile and despicable as men's disdainful speech would make it. Hooker.

VIL

I disclaim scorn'd, and scorn'd death,
Rather than I would be vile Shaksp.
He to-day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother; be he ne'er to vile,
This day shall gentle his condition. Shaksp.
O ye Paganian nymphs, that, hating vile things, delight in lofty hills, and in delicious springs!
Drayton.

The inhabitants account gold but as a vile thing. Abbot.

That sinful creature man elected is,
And in our place the heavens possess he must;
Vile man, begot of clay, and born of dust. Fairfax.

A spontaneous production is against matter of fact; a thing without example not only in man, but the vilest of weeds. Bentley.

2. Morally impure; wicked.
Restor'd by thee, vile as I am, to place
Of new acceptance. Milton.

VILED. adj. [from vile; whence revile.]
Abusive; scurrilous; defamatory.
He granted life to all except to one, who had used
viled speeches against king Edward. Hayward.

VILELY. adv. [from vile.] Basely; meanly;
shamefully.
The Volsicians vilely yielded the town. Shaksp.

How can I
Forget my Hector, treated with dishonour, Depriv'd of funeral rites, and vilely dragg'd,
A bloody corse, about the walls of Troy? A. Phillips.

VILENESS. n. f. [from vile.]
1. Baseness; meanness; despicableness.
His vileness us shall never awe:
But here our sports shall be,
Such as the golden world first saw,
Most innocent and free. Drayton.

Reflect on the essential vileness of matter, and its impotence to confer its own being. Creech.
Considering the vileness of the clay, I wondered that no tribune of that age durst ever venture to ask the potter, What dost thou make? Swift.

2. Moral or intellectual baseness.
Then, vileness of mankind!
Could none, alas! repeat me good or great,
Wash my pale body, or bewail my fate? Prior.

VILIFY. n. f. [from vilify.] One that
vilifies.
To VILIFY. v. a. [from vile.]

1. To debase; to degrade; to make vile.
Their maker's image
Forsook them, when themselves they vilify'd
To serve ungovern'd appetite, and took His image whom they serv'd. Milton.

2. To defame; to make contemptible.
Tonnain could not abide
To hear his sovereign vilify'd. Drayton.

The displeasure of their prince, those may expect, who would put in practice all methods to vilify his person. Addison.

Many passions dispose us to depress and vilify
the merit of one rising in the esteem of mankind.
Addison.

VILL. n. f. [vile, Fr. villa, Lat.] A village;
a small collection of houses. Little in use.

This book gives an account of the manurable lands in every manor, town, or vill. Hale.

VILLA. n. f. [villa, Lat.] A country seat.
The ancient Romans lay the foundations of their villas and palaces within the very borders of the sea. Addison.

At six hours distance from Bismantium's walls,
Where Bosphorus into the Euxine falls,
In a gay district, call'd th' Elysian vale,
A farm'd villa stands, propos'd for sale. Harte.

All vast possessions; just the same the case,
Whether you call them villa, park, or chase. Pope.

VILLAGE. n. f. [village, Fr.] A small collection of houses in the country, less than a town.

Beggars, with roaring voices, from low farms,
Or peeping villages, sheep coats, and mills,
Increase their charity. Shaksp.

The early village cock
Hath twice done salutation to the morn. Shaksp.

2

VIL

* You have many enemies, that know not
Why they are set; but, like the village cure,
Bark when their fellows do. Shaksp.

The country villages were burnt down to the ground. Kneller.
Those village-words give us a mean idea of the thing. Dryden.

Seam'd o'er with wounds which his own sabre gave,
In the vile habit of a village slave. Pope.

VILLAGER. n. f. [from village.] An inhabitant of the village.
Brutus had rather be a villager,
Than to repute himself a son of Rome
Under such hard conditions. Shaksp.

When once her eye
Hath met the virtue of this innight dust,
I shall appear some harmless villager,
Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear. Milt.

If there are conveniences of life, which common use reaches not, it is not reason to reject them, because every villager doth not know them. Locke.

VILLAGERY. n. f. [from village.] District of villages.
Robin Goodfellow, are you not he
That fright the maidens of the villagery? Shaksp.

VILLAIN. n. f. [villain, Fr. villanus, low
Latin.]

1. One who held by a base tenure.
The Irish inhabiting the lands fully conquered, being in condition of slaves and villains, did render a greater revenue than if they had been made the king's free subjects. Davies.

2. A wicked wretch.
We were prevented by a dozen armed knights, or rather villains, who, using this time of their extreme feebleness, all together set upon them. Sidney.

O villain! villain! I have very opinion in the letter.
Abhorred villain! unnatural, detested, brutish villain! Shaksp.

What in the world,
That names me traitor, villain! he lies. Shaksp.

He was stabbed to the heart by the hand of a villain, upon the mere impious pretence of his being odious to the parliament. Clarendon.

Calm thinking villains, whom no faith could fix;
Of crooked counsels, and dark politics. Pope.

VILLANAGE. n. f. [from villain.]
1. The state of a villain; base servitude.
They exercise most bitter tyranny
Upon the parts brought into their bondage;
No wretchedness is like to sinful villanage. Spenser.

Upon every such surrender and grant, there was but one freeholder, which was the lord himself;
all the rest were but tenants in villanage, and were not fit to be sworn in juries. Davies.

2. Baseness; infamy.
If in thy smoke it ends, their glories shine;
But infamy and villanage are thine. Dryden.

To VILLANIZE. v. a. [from villain.] To debase; to degrade; to defame.
Were virtue by descent, a noble name
Could never villanize his father's fame;
But, as the first, the last of all the line,
Would, like the sun, ev'n in descending shine. Dryden.

These are the fools, whose solidity can baffle all arguments; whose glory is in their shame, in the debasing and villanizing of mankind to the condition of beasts. Bentley.

VILLANOUS. adj. [from villain.]
1. Base; vile; wicked.
2. Sorry; in a familiar sense.
Thou art my son; I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion; but chiefly a villanous trick of thine eye doth warrant me. Shaksp.

3. It is used by Shaksp. to exaggerate any thing detestable.
We shall lose our time,
And all be turn'd to barnacles or apes,
With foreheads villanous low. Shaksp.

VILLANOUSLY. adv. [from villanous.]
Wickedly; basely.
The wandering Numidian falsified his faith, and villanously slew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself. Kneller.

VIN

VILLANOUSNESS. n. f. [from villanous.]
Baseness; wickedness.
VILLANY. n. f. [from villain; villanerie, old French.]

1. Wickedness; baseness; depravity; gross
atrociousness.
Trust not those envious waters of his eye;
For villany is not without such a rheum;
And he, long teared in it, makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocence Shaksp.

He is the prince's jester; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villany. Shaksp.

2. A wicked action; a crime. In this sense it has a plural.
No villany, or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but a lie was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.

Such villanies rous'd Horace into wrath;
And 'tis more noble to pursue his path,
Than an old tale. Dryden.

VILLATICK. adj. [villaticus, Lat.] Belonging to villages.
Evening dragon came,
Assailant on the perched roofs,
And nests in order rang'd,
Of tame villatick fowl. Milne.

VILLI. n. f. [Lat.] In anatomy, are the same as fibres; and in botany, small hairs like the grain of plumb or flax, with which, as a kind of excrecence, some trees do abound. Quincy.

VILLOUS. adj. [villofus, Latin.] Shaggy; rough; furry.
The liquor of the stomach, which with fasting grows sharp, and the quick sensation of the inward villous coat of the stomach, seem to be the cause of the sense of hunger. Arbutnot

VIMINEOUS. adj. [vimineus, Lat.] Made of twigs.
As in the hive's vimineous dome
Ten thousand bees enjoy their home;
Each does her studious action vary,
To go and come, to fetch and carry. Tray.

VINCIBLE. adj. [from vincio, Lat.] Con-querable; superable.
He not vincible in spirit, and well assured that shortness of provision would in a short time draw the feditious to shorter limits, drew his sword. Hayward.

* Because 'twas absolutely in my power to have attended more heedfully, there was liberty in the principle, the mistake which influenced the error was vincible. Arbutnot

VINCIBLENESS. n. f. [from vincible.] Inbleness to be overcome. Dick.

VINCTURE. n. f. [vinctura, Latin.] A binding. Bailey.

VINDEMIAL. adj. [vindemia, Latin.] Belonging to a vintage.
To VINDEMIATE. v. n. [vindemia, Latin]

To gather the vintage.
Now vindemiate, and take your bees towards the expiration of this month. Tray.

VINDEMIATION. n. f. [vindemia, Latin] Grape-gathering. Bailey.

To VINDICATE. v. a. [vindico, Lat.]

1. To justify; to support; to maintain.
Where the respondent denies any proposition, the opponent must directly vindicate and confirm the proposition; i. e. he must make that proposition
the conclusion of his next syllogism. Harte.

2. To revenge; to avenge.
We ought to have added, how far an holy war is to be pursued; whether to enforce a new belief and to vindicate or punish infidelity. Pope.

Man is not more inclinable to obey God than man; but God is more powerful to exact submission, and to vindicate rebellion. Pope.

The more numerous the offenders are, the more his justice is concerned to vindicate the injured. Tray.

Assemble ours, and all the Theban race,
To vindicate on Atreus thy disgrace. Dryden.

VIN

3. To assert; to claim with efficacy.
Never touch'd upon this way, which our poet justly has dedicated to himself. Dryden.

The beauty of this town, without a fleet,
From all the world shall vindicate her trade. Dryd.

4. To clear; to protect from censure.
God's ways of dealing with us are by proposition of terrors and promises. To these is added the authority of the commander, vindicated from our neglect by the interposition of the greatest signs and wonders, in the hands of his prophets, and of his Son. Hammond.

I may assert eternal providence,
And vindicate the ways of God to man. Milton.
VINDICATION. n. f. [vindication, Fr. from indicat.] Defence; assertion; justification.

This is no vindication of her conduct. She still acts a mean part, and, through fear, becomes an accomplice in endeavouring to betray the Greeks. Brown.

VINDICATIVE. adj. [from vindicate.] Revengeful; given to revenge.

He, in heat of action,
Is more vindicative than jealous love. Shakespeare.
Public revenges are for the most part fortunate;
but in private revenges it is not so. Vindicative persons live the life of witches, who, as they are mischievous, so end they unfortunate. Bacon.

The fruits of adulter'd choler, and the evapora-tions of a vindicative spirit. Howell.
Do not too many believe no zeal to be spiritual,
but what is censorious or vindicative? whereas no zeal is spiritual, that is not also charitable. Spratt.
Dispute, betwixt a passion purely vindicative, and those counsels where divine justice avenges the injury. L'Estrange.

VINDICATOR. n. f. [from vindicate.] One who vindicates; an assertor.

He treats tyranny, and the vices attending it, with the utmost rigour; and consequently a noble soul is better pleas'd with a jealous vindicator of Roman liberty, than with a temporizing poet. Dryden.

VINDICATORY. adj. [from vindicator.]

1. Punitory; performing the office of vengeance.

The afflictions of Job were no vindicatory punishments to take vengeance of his sins, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall.

2. Defensory; justificatory.

VINDICTIVE. adj. [from vindicta, Lat.]
Given to revenge; revengeful.

I am vindictive enough to repel force by force. Dryden.

Augustus was of a nature too vindictive, to have contented himself with so small a revenge. Dryden.
Sins are not reparative, but vindictive, when they are commenced against insolvent persons. Ketticwell.

VINE. n. f. [vinea, Lat.] The plant that bears the grape.

The flower consists of many leaves placed in a regular order, and expanding in form of a rose; the ovary, which is situated in the bottom of the flower, becomes a round fruit, full of juice, and contains many small stones in each. The tree is climbing, sending forth clasps at the joints, by which it sustains itself to what plant stands near it, and the fruit is produced in bunches. The species are, 1.
The wild vine, commonly called the claret grape.
2. The July grape. 3. The Corinth grape, vulgarly called the currant grape. 4. The parley-leaved grape. 5. The miller's grape. This is called the Burgundy in England; the leaves of this sort are very much powdered with white in the spring, from whence it had the name of miller's grape. 6. Is what is called in Burgundy Pincen, and at Orleans Averna; it makes very good wine. 7. The white chasselas, or royal muscadine: it is a large white grape. the juice is very rich. 8. The black chasselas, or black muscadine: the juice is very rich.
9. The red chasselas, or red muscadine. 10. The Turkish grape. 11. The white muscat, or white Frontinac. 12. The red Frontinac. 13. The black Frontinac. 14. The damask grape. 15.

VIO

The white sweet water. 16. The black sweet water.
17. The white muscadine. 18. The red grape.
19. The Greek grape. 20. The pearl grape. 21.
The St. Peter's grape, or helperian. 22. The malmsley grape. 23. The malmsley muscadine. 24.
The red Hamburg grape. 25. The black Ham-burgh, or warmer grape. 26. The Switzerland grape. 27. The white muscat, or Frontinac of Alexandria: called also the Jerusalem muscat and great muscat. 28. The red muscat, or Frontinac of Alexandria. 29. The white muscat grape. 30.
The white morillon. 31. The Alcant grape. 32.
The white Auvernat. 33. The grey Auvernat.
34. The raisin muscat. The late duke of Tuscany, who was very curious in collecting all the sorts of Italian and Greek grapes into his vineyards, was possessed of upwards of three hundred several varieties. Miller.

The vine-prop elm, the poplar never dry. Spenser.

In her days every man shall eat in safety,
Under his own vine, what he plants. Shakespeare.
The captain left of the poor to be vine droffers. 2 Kings.

Depending vines the shelving cavern screen,
With purple clusters blushing through the green. Pope.

VINEFRETTER. n. f. [from vine and fret.]
A worm that eats vine leaves.

VINEGAR. n. f. [vinaigre, Fr.]

1. Wine grown four; eager wine.
Vinegar is made by setting the vessel of wine against the hot sun; and therefore vinegar will not burn, much of the finer parts being exhale. Racon.
Heav'n's blest beam turns vinegar more sour. Pope.

2. Any thing really or metaphorically sour.
Some laugh like parrots at a bag-piper,
And others of such vinegar aspect,
That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile. Shakespeare.

VINEYARD. n. f. [pingearb, Saxon.] A ground planted with vines.

Let us not live in France; let us quit all,
And give our vineyards to a barbarous people. Shakespeare.

Though some had so farfetched in the vineyards,
and with the wine, that they had been left behind,
the generosity of the Spaniards sent them all home again. Clarendon.

VINNEWED, or Vinacy. adj. Mouldy. Ainslie.

VINOUS. adj. [from vinum, Lat.] Having the qualities of wine; consisting of wine.
The motion of the body drops may be in part due to some partial solution made by the vinous spirit. Boyle.

Water will imbibe
The small remains of spirit, and acquire A vinous flavour. Philips.

VINTAGE. n. f. [vinage, Fr.] The produce of the vine for the year; the time in which grapes are gathered.

The best wines are in the direct vintage. Bacon.
Our first success in war make Bacchus crown,
And half the vintage of the year our own. Waller.

VINTAGER. n. f. [from vintage.] He who gathers the vintage. Ainslie.

VINTNER. n. f. [from vinum, Lat.] One who sells wine.

The vintner may draw what religion he pleases.
The vintner, by mixing poison with his wines,
destroys more lives than any malignant disease. Swift.

VINTRY. n. f. The place where wine is sold. Ainslie.

VIOLE. n. f. [violle, Fr. viola, Ital.] A stringed instrument of musick.

My tongue's use is to me no more,
Than an unstringed viol, or a harp. Shakespeare.
To strain a string, stop it with the finger, as in the necks of lutes and viols. Bacon.
The trembling lute some touch, some strain the viol best. Dryden.

VIO

Loud o'er the red Cremona's tramp doth sound;
Me softer airs best, and softer strings
Of lute, or viol, still more apt for mournful things. Milton.

VIOLABLE. adj. [from violabilis, Lat.]
Such as may be violated or hurt.

VIOLACEOUS. adj. [from viola, Lat.] Resembling violets.

To VIOLATE. v. a. [violo, Lat.]

1. To injure; to hurt.
I question thy bold entrance,
Employ'd to violate the sleep of those Whose dwelling God hath planted here in bliss. Milton.

Kindness for man, and pity for his fate,
May mix with bliss, and yet not violate. Dryden.
Cease.

To know, what known will violate thy peace. Pope.

2. To infringe; to break any thing venerable.

Some of violated vows
Twist the souls of friend and friend. Shakespeare.
Those offences which are by their special qualities breaches of supernatural laws, do also, for that they are generally evil, violate in general that principle of reason, which willet universally to fly from evil. Hooker.

Those reasonings which, by violating common sense, tend to subvert every principle of rational belief, to sap the foundations of truth and science, and to leave the mind exposed to all the horrors of scepticism. Beattie.

3. To injure by irreverence,
I would violate my own arm rather than a church. Brown.

Forbidden to violate the sacred fruit. Milton.

4. To ravish; to deflower.

The Sabine's violated charms Obtain'd the glory of his rising arms. Prior.

VIOLATION. n. f. [violatio, Latin.]

1. Infringement or injury of something sacred or venerable.
Their right conceit that to perjury vengeance is due, was not without good effect, as touching the course of their lives, who feared the wilful violation of oaths. Hooker.

Men, who had no other guide but their reason, considered the violation of an oath to be a great crime. Addison.

2. Rape; the act of deflowering.

If your pure maidens fall into the hand
Of hot and forcing violation. Shakespeare.

VIOLATOR. n. f. [violator, Latin.]

1. One who injures or infringes something sacred.
May such places, built for divine worship, derive a blessing upon the head of the builders, as lasting as the cists that never fail to rest upon the sacrilegious violators of them! South.

2. A ravisher.

Angelo is an adulterous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin violator. Shakespeare.
How does the subject herself to the violator's upbraidings and insults! Clarissa.

VIOLENCE. n. f. [violencia, Latin.]

1. Force; strength applied to any purpose.
To be imprison'd in the viewless wind,
And blown with restless violence about. Shakespeare.

All the elements
At least had gone to wreck, disorder'd and torn
With violence of this conflict, had not soon
Th' Eternal King his golden scales. Milton.

2. An attack; an assault; a murder.

A noise did scare me from the tomb;
And she, too desperate, would not go with me;
But, as it seems, did violence on herself. Shaksp.

3. Outrage; unjust force.

Grief'd at his heart, when looking down he saw
The whole earth fill'd with violence; and all flesh
Corrupting each their way. Milton.

4. Eagerness; vehemence.

That seal
You ask for with such violence, the king
With his own hand gave me. Shakespeare.

VIP

5. Injury; infringement.

We cannot, without offering violence to all to make divine and human, deny an universal deluge. Burnet.

6. forcible defecation.

VIOLANT. adj. [violentus, Latin.]

1. Forcible; acting with strength.

A violent cross wind blows. Milton.

2. Produced, or continued by force.

The posture we find them in, according to his doctrine, must be looked upon as unnatural and violent; and no violent state can be perpetual. Burnet.

3. Not natural, but brought by force.

Conqueror death discovers them scarce men; violent or shameful death their due reward. Mit.

4. Affailant; acting by force.

Some violent hands were laid on Humphry's life. Shakespeare.

A foe subtila or violent.

5. Unreasonably vehement.

We might be reckoned fierce and violent, to tear away that, which, if our mouths did condemn, our consciences would storm and repine thereat. Hooker.
The covetous extortioner should remember, that such violence shall not take heaven, but hell, by force. Deany of Piety.

6. Extorted; not voluntary.

Vows made in pain, as violent and void. Milton.

VIOLENTLY. adv. [from violent.] With force; forcibly; vehemently.

Temperately proceed to what you would

Thus violently redress. Shakespeare.

Flame burneth more violently towards the sides,

than in the midst. Bacon.

Ancient privileges must not, without great necessity, be revoked, nor forfeitures be exacted violently,

nor penal laws urged rigorously. Taylor.

VIOL. n. f. [viollette, French; viola, Latin.] A flower.

It hath a polypetalous anomalous flower, somewhat resembling the papilionaceous flower; for its two upper petals represent the standard, the two side ones the wings; but the lower one, which ends in a tail, resembles the iris. Out of the empalement arises the pointal, which becomes a three-cornered stalk opening into three parts, and full of roundish seeds. There are nine species. Miller.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,

Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakespeare.

Sweet echo, sweetest nymph that liv'st unseen,

By flow Meander's margin green,

And in the violet-embroider'd vale. Milton.

It alters not our simple idea, whether we think that blue be in the violet itself, or in our mind only;

and only the power of producing it by the texture of its parts, to be in the violet itself. Locke.

VIOLIN. n. f. [violin, French; from viol.] A fiddle; a stringed instrument of musick.

Praise with timbrels, organs, flutes;

Praise with violins and lutes. Sandys.

Sharp violins proclaim

Their jealous pangs and desperation,

For the fair disdainful dame. Dryden.

VIOLIN. n. f. [from viol.] A player on the viol.

VIOLONCELLO. n. f. [Italian.] A

stringed instrument of musick.

VIPEL. n. f. [vipera, Latin.]

1. A serpent of that species which brings its young alive, of which many are poisonous.

A viper came out of the heat, and fastened on his hand. Acts.

He'll gall of asps with thirsty lips suck in;

The viper's deadly teeth shall pierce his skin. Sandys.

Viper catchers have a remedy, in which they place fresh at confidence, as to be no more afraid of the bite of a viper, than of a common puncture.

There is no other than a young viperina, presently pushed into the wound. Darham.

VIR

2. Any thing mischievous.

Where is this viper, That would deposit this city, and He every man himself? Shakespeare.

VIPERINE. adj. [viperinus, Latin.] Belonging to a viper.

VIPEROUS. adj. [vipereus, Latin] from viper.] Having the qualities of a viper.

My tender years can tell,
Civil dissention is a vip'rous worm,
That gnaws the bowels of the commonwealth. Shakespeare.

We are peremptory to dispatch
This vip'rous traitor. Shakespeare.

Some vip'rous critick may bereave
Th' opinion of thy worth for some defect. Daniel.

VIPER'S bugloss. n. f. [echium, Latin.]

A plant.

Each flower is succeeded by four seeds, which are in form of a viper's head. Miller.

VIPER'S gulf. n. f. [scorzonera, Latin.]

A plant.

VIRAGO. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A female warrior; a woman with the qualities of a man.

Melpomene is represented like a virago, or manly lady, with a majestic and grave counteenance. Peacham.

To arms! to arms! the fierce virago cries,

And swift as lightning to the combat flies. Pope.

2. It is commonly used in detestation for an impudent turbulent woman.

VIRELAY. n. f. [virelay, virelai, Fr.]

A sort of little ancient French poem, that consisted only of two rhymes and short verses, with strops. L'Acad.

The mournful muse in mirth now list no more,

As she was wont in youth and summer days;

But if thou algate lust like virelays,

And looser songs of love to underlong. Spenser.

The band of flutes began to play,

To which a lady sung a virelay;

And still at every close she would repeat

The burden of the song. The daisy is so sweet. Dryden.

VIRENT. adj. [virens, Latin.] Green;

not faded.

In these, yet fresh and virent, they carve out the figures of men and women. Brown.

VIRGE. n. f. [virga, Latin; better verge, from verge, French.] A dean's mace.

Suppose him now a dean complaisant,

Devoutly lolling in his seat;

The silver virge, with decent pride,

Stuck underneath his cushion side. Swift.

VIRGIN. n. f. [virge, French; virgo,

Latin.]

1. A maid; a woman unacquainted with men.

This aspect of mine hath fear'd the valiant;

The belt regarded virgins of our clime

Have lov'd it too. Shakespeare.

Senseless bauble!

Art thou a sedary for this act, and look'st

So virgin-like without? Shakespeare.

The damsel was very fair, and a virgin. Genes.

Angelo is an adult'rous thief,

An hypocrite, a virgin violator. Shakespeare.

Much less can that have any place,

At which a virgin hides her face. Cowley.

2. A woman not a mother. Unusual.

Likely to Ceres in her prime,

Yet virgin of Proserpina from Jove. Milton.

3. Any thing untouched or unmingled;

any thing pure; as, virgin honey,

Tapers of white wax, commonly called virgin

wax, burn with less smoke than common yellow

wax. Boyle.

I have found virgin earth the best-marshes of Cheshire. Woodward.

Below the upper was a deep bed of sand only,

which I weighed, together with the virgin mould. Darham.

VIR

4. The sign of the zodiack in which the sun is in August.

Thence down again by Leo and the Virgin. Milton.

VIRGIN. adj. Befitting a virgin; suitable to a virgin; maidenly.

Can you blame her then, being a maid, yet roiled over with the virgin crimson of modesty, as the den
the appearance of a naked blind boy? Shakespeare.

What says the silver with her virgin hue? Shakespeare.

With ease a brother overcame
The formal decencies of virgin shame. Cowley.

As I look upon you all to be so many great blissings of a married state; so I leave it to your choice, either to do as I have done, or to aspire after higher degrees of perfection in a virgin state of life. Law.

To VIRGIN. v. n. [a cant word.] To play the virgin.

A kiss

Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge,

I carried from thee, my dear, and my true ly-

Math virgin'd it e'er since. Shakespeare.

VIRGINAL. adj. [from virgin.] Maiden, maidenly; pertaining to a virgin.

On the earth more fair was never seen,

Of chastity and honour virginal. Fairy Queen.

Tears virginal

Shall be to me even as the dew to fire;

And beauty, that the tyrant oft reclaim,

Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax. Shaks.

Purity is a special part of this superstructure, restraining of all desires of the flesh within the known limits of conjugal or virginal chastity. Hannover.

To VIRGINAL. v. n. To put; to finish

as on the virginal. A cant word.

Still virginaling upon thy palm. Shakespeare.

VIRGINAL. n. f. [more usually virginals.]

A musical instrument so called, because commonly used by young ladies.

The musician hath produced two means of framing strings. The one is stopping them with the finger, as in the necks of lutes and viols; the other is the shortness of the string, as in harps and tri-ngals. Bacon.

VIRGINITY. n. f. [virginitas, Latin]

Maidenhead; unacquaintance with man.

You do impeach your modesty too much,

To trust the opportunity of night,

And the ill counsel of a desert place,

With the rich worth of your virginity. Shakespeare.

Natural virginity of itself is not a state more acceptable to God; but that which is chosen not for to the conveniences of religion, and separating from worldly incumbences. Tasso.

VIRILE. adj. [virilis, Lat.] Belonging to man; not puerile; not feminine.

VIRILITY. n. f. [virilité, Fr. virilitas,

Lat. from virile.]

1. Manhood; character of man.

The lady made generous advances to the borders of virility. Russet.

2. Power of procreation.

The great climacterical was past, before they begat children, or gave any testimony of their virility; for none begat children before the age of sixty-five. Brown.

VIRMILION. n. f. [properly vermillion.]

A red colour.

Agile, the farrest Nix of the flood,

With a virmillion dyo his temples stain'd. Religious.

VIRTUAL. adj. [virtual, Fr. from virtus.]

Having the efficacy without the real or material part.

Metallic waters have virtual cold in them.

Put therefore wood into south's water, and it whether it will not harden. Boyle.

Heat and cold have a virtual transition, with commutation of substance. Boyle.

Love not the heavenly parts? And how can it love

Express they? by looks only? or, do they irradiance? virtual, or immediate touch? Milton.

VIR

Every kind that lives,
Fomented by his virtual pow'r, and warm'd.
Milton.

Neither an actual or virtual intention of the mind, but only that which may be gathered from the outward acts.
Stillingfleet.

VIRTUALITY. n. f. [from virtual.] Efficacy.

In one grain of corn there lieth dormant a virtuality of many other, and from thence sometimes proceed an hundred ears.
Brown.

VIRTUALLY. adv. [from virtual.] In effect, though not materially.

They are virtually contained in other words still continued.
Hammond.

Such is our constitution, that the bulk of the people virtually give their approbation to every thing they are bound to obey.
Addison.

To VIRTUATE. v. a. [from virtue.] To make efficacious. Not used.

Portable gold should be endued with a capacity of being assimilated to the minute heat, and radical moisture; or at least virtuated with a power of generating the said elements.
Havercy.

VIRTUE. n. f. [virtus, Lat.]

1. Moral goodness; opposed to vice.

Father I'm untaken, or there is virtue in that fallstaff.
Shakespeare.

And that there is, all nature cries aloud
Through all her works, he must delight in virtue,
And that which he delights in must be happy.
Addison.

Virtue only makes our bliss below.
The character of prince Henry is improved by Shakespeare; and through the veil of his vices and irregularities, we see a dawn of greatness and virtue.
Shakespeare illustrated.

2. A particular moral excellence.

In Belmont is a lady,
And she is fair, and fairer than that word,
Of wondrous virtues.
Shakespeare.

Remember all his virtues,
And shew mankind that goodness is your care.
Addison.

3. Medicinal quality.

All hidden secrets,
All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Be instant and remediate.
Shakespeare.

4. Medichinal efficacy.

An essay writer must practise the classical message, and give the virtue of a full draught in a few drops.
Addison.

5. Efficacy; power. Before virtue is used sometimes by and sometimes in; by in virtue is meant in consequence of the virtue.

If neither words nor herbs will do, I'll try flames,
For there's a virtue in them.
Lyly.

Where there is a full purpose to please God, there, what a man can do, shall, by virtue thereof be accepted.
South.

They are not sure by virtue of syllogism, that the conclusion certainly follows from the premises.
Locke.

Thus they shall attain, partly in virtue of the principle made by God; and partly in virtue of poetry.
Atterbury.

He used to travel through Greece, by virtue of his table, which procured him reception in all the towns.
Addison.

6. Acting power.

Jesus knowing that virtue had gone out of him,
turn'd him about.
Mark.

7. Secret agency; efficacy, without visible or material action.

She moves the body, which the doth possess;
Yet no part toucheth, but by virtue's touch.
Davies.

8. Bravery; valour.

Trust to thy single virtue; for thy soldiers
Took their discharge.
Shakespeare.

The conquest of Palestine with singular virtue they performed, and held that kingdom some few generations.

Raleigh.

9. Excellence; that which gives excellence.

In the Greek poets, as also in Plautus, the economy of poems is better observed than in Virgil, who thought the sole grace and virtue of their fable, the licking in of sentences, as ours do the forcing in of jests.
Boa Jonson.

10. One of the orders of the celestial hierarchy.

Thrones, dominations, principdoms, virtues,
powers.
Milton.

A virtue virtue through the etherial sky,
From orb to orb unceasing dost thou fly.
Lucan.

VIRTELESS. adj. [from virtue.]

1. Wanting virtue; deprived of virtue.

2. Not having efficacy; without operating qualities.

All second causes, together with nature herself, without that operative virtue, which God gave them, would become altogether inert, virtueless, and dead.
Raleigh.

Virtueless the world's all herbs and charms,
Wherewith false men incite their patients' harms.
Faust.

Some would make those glorious creatures vir-tueless.
Halewell.

VIRTUOSO. n. f. [Italian.] A man

skilled in antique or natural curiosities;
a man dulous of painting, statuary, or architecture.

Metaphs those generous virtues dwell in a higher region than other mortals.
Glaucus.

Virtuoso, the Italians call a man who loves the mable arts, and is a critic in them. And amongst our French painters, the word virtuoso is understood in the same signification.
De la.

This building was beheld with admiration by the
virtuosi of that time.
Boa.

Shewers of rain are now met with in every water-work, and the virtuosi of France covered a little vault with artificial snow.
Addison.

VIRTUOUS. adj. [from virtue.]

1. Morally good; applied to persons and practices.

If his occasion were not virtuous,
I should not urge it to him faithfully.
Shakespeare.

Virtuous and holy, be these conquests.
What the will's to do or say,
Is with virtuous deity, divine, best.
Milton.

I would of heaven, who finds
One virtuous rarely found,
That in domestic good combines.
Milton.

Happy that house, his way to peace is smooth.
Since there is that necessity of it for God's service, and all virtuous ends, it cannot in its own nature be a thing offensive and misadvised.
Kentworth.

2. [applied to a woman.] Chaste.

Milton's Mad, the maiden wife, the virtuous virtue, that hath the jealous fool to her husband.
Shakespeare.

3. Done in consequence of moral goodness.

Non love is always of a virtuous kind,
But oft to virtuous acts influences the mind.
Drayton.

Consider how often, how powerfully you are endowed to a virtuous life, and what great and glorious things God has done for you, and to make you in love with every thing that can promote his glory.
Law.

4. Efficacious; powerful.

Before her gates, bull wolves and lions lay,
Which, with her virtuous drags to tame the made,
That wolf, nor lion, would one man invade.
Chapman.

With one virtuous touch, the arch-demon thou Produces with terriblest heaviest mind.
Milton.

5. Having wonderful or eminent properties.

Out of his hand
That virtuous steel he rudely snatch'd away.
Spenser.

VIS

Lifting up his vision staff on high,
He mote the sea, which calmed was with speed.
Spenser.

He own'd that vision ring and glass.
Milton.

6. Having medicinal qualities.

Some observe that there is a vision herb, and another without vision, the vision is taken from the heat that feeds where there are medicinal herbs, and that without vision, from those that feed where no such herbs are.
Bacon.

The ladies fought around For vision herbs, which, gather'd from the ground,
They could the juice, and cooling ointment make.
Dryden.

VIRTUOUSLY. adv. [from virtuous.] In a virtuous manner according to the rules of virtue.

The gods are my witnesses, I desire to do vir-tuously.
Sidney.

From, then, taught the world no virtuously
how to do, that they had done to see how to live.
Hedder.

They that are virtuously, and yet do so,
The devil then comes suspecting, they to be virtuous.
Shakespeare.

Not from grey hairs authority dost thou,
Nor from hard words, nor from a wrinkled brow;
But our poll mix, when virtuously thou art,
Must to our age those happy fruits present.
Danham.

The collection has a little daughter four years old, who has been virtuously educated.
Addison.

VIRTUOUSNESS. n. f. [from virtuous.]

The state or character of being vir-tuous.

Many other adventures are intermeddled; as the love of Britannia, and virtuousness of Belphebe;
and the labyrinth of Heliconia.
Spenser.

VIRULENCE. } n. f. [from virulent.]

1. Mental poison; malignity; acrimony of temper; bitterness.

Disputes in religion are mingled with virulence and intemperance.
Dryden of Picty.

Men by unworthy malice and impotent virulence
had highly abused of him.
Fill.

It is only into their minds the utmost virulence, instead of that charity which is the perfection and ornament of religion.
Addison.

His whole conduct has been marked with a virulence, as he cherishes, at they had not too much of it, and of nature's justice of speech, and to virulence of pen, in the most productive of their party.
Swift.

VIRULENT. adj. [from virulent.] Virulent, Latin.]

1. Poisonous; venomous.

2. Perfumed in the mind; bitter; malignant.

VIRULENTLY. adv. [from virulent.]

Maliciously; with bitterness.

VISAGE. n. m. [visage, Fr. visagio, Ital.]

Face; countenance; look. It is now rarely used but with some ideas of dislike or horror.

Phoebe dash behind
Her visage in the wat'ry glass,
Decking with liquid pearls the bladed glass.
Shakespeare.

When she shall hear this of the, with her maid,
She'll flay the world with visage.
Shakespeare.

Who's to be my mercy,
But to content the rage of offence?
Shakespeare.

With hostile towns,
And visage all of man's, first thus began.
Milton.

By the root, that made the hideous root,
His visage down the stream was sent,
Down the swift Hebrus to the Trojan shore.
Milton.

Love and beauty fill that visage place;
Death cannot fright 'em from their wonted place.
Waller.

To VISCRUTE. v. a. [viscruta, Latin.]
To embowel; to exenterate.

VISCID. adj. [viscidus, Lat.] Glutinous; tenacious.

VISCIDITY. n. f. [from viscid.]

1. Glutinousness; tenacity; ropiness.

This motion in some human creatures may be weak, in respect to the viscosity of what is taken, so as not to be able to propel it. Arbutnot.

2. Glutinous concretion.
Catharticks of mercurials precipitate the viscidities by their syplicity. Floyer.

VISCOSITY. n. f. [viscosité, Fr. from viscous.]

1. Glutinousness; tenacity.

The air being mixed with the animal fluids, determines their condition as to rarity, density, viscosity, tenacity. Arbutnot.

2. A glutinous substance.

A viscous emanation, or continued effluvia, after some distance, retracteth unto itself, as is observable in drops of syrups, and seminal viscosities. Houan.

VISCOUNT. n. f. [viccomes, Lat.]

Viscount signifies as much as sheriff; between which two words there is no other difference, but that the one comes from our conquerors the Normans, and the other from our ancestors the Saxons. Viscount also signifies a degree of nobility next to an earl, which is an old name of office, but a new one of dignity, never heard of amongst us till Henry vi. his days. Cowell.

VISCOUNTESS. n. f. [from viscount.]

Viscount and viscountess are pronounced vicount and vicountess. The lady of a viscount; a peeress of the fourth order.

VISCOUS. adj. [visqueux, Fr. viscosus, Lat.] Glutinous; sticky; tenacious.

The cause of the scouring virtue of nitre is, that it hath a subtle spirit, which severeth and divideth any thing that is foul and viscous. Bacon.

Holly is of so viscous a juice as they make birdlime of the bark. Bacon.

VISIBILITY. n. f. [visibilité, Fr. from visible.]

1. The state or quality of being perceptible by the eye.

The colours of outward objects brought into a darkened room, do much depend for their visibility upon the dimness of the light they are beheld by. Boyle.

2. State of being apparent, or openly discoverable; conspicuousness.

They produced this as an influence against the perpetual visibility of the church, and he brings it to prove that it ceased to be a true church. Sittingfleet.

In these, the visibility and example of our virtues will chiefly consist. Rogers.

VISIBLE. n. f. Perceptibility by the eye.

Visible work upon a looking-glass, which is like the pupil of the eye; and audibles upon the places of echo, which resemble the cavern of the ear. Bacon.

VISIBLE. adj. [visible, Fr. visibilis, Lat.]

1. Perceptible by the eye.

On this mount he appeared; under this tree stood visible; and I
Here with him at this fountain talk'd. Milton.

Each thought was visible, that roll'd within,
As through a crystal case the figur'd hours are seen. Dryden.

A long series of ancestors shews the native lustre with great advantage; but if he degenerate from his line, the least spot is visible on ermine. Dryden.

What's true beauty but fair virtue's face;
Virtue made visible in outward grace? Young.

2. Discovered to the eye.

If that the heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame the vile offences,
Humanity must perforce prey on itself,
Like monsters of the deep. Shakespeare.

3. Apparent; open; conspicuous.

The factions at court were greater, or more visible than before. Clarendon.

VISIBILITY. n. f. [from visible.] State or quality of being visible.

VISIBLY. adv. [from visible.] In a manner perceptible by the eye.

The day being visibly governed by the sun, is a little longer than the revolution of the equator; so much as is occasioned by the advance of the sun in his annual contrary motion along the ecliptick. Holder.

By the head we make known more visibly our supplications, our threatnings: enough to lie the face, and to understand the mind at half a word. Dryden.

VISION. n. f. [visio, Fr. visio, Lat.]

1. Sight; the faculty of seeing.

Anatomists, when they have taken off from the bottom of the eye that outward and most thick coat called the dura mater, can then see through the thinner coats, the pictures of objects lively painted thereon. And these pictures, propagated by motion along the fibres of the optic nerves into the brain, are the cause of vision. Newton.

These theorems being admitted into optics, there would be scope enough of handling that science voluminously, after a new manner; not only by teaching those things which tend to the perfection of vision, but also by determining mathematically all kinds of phenomena of colours which could be produced by refractions. Newton.

2. The act of seeing.

Vision in the next life is the perfecting of faith in this; or faith here is turned into vision there, as hope into enjoying. Hemmond.

3. A supernatural appearance; a spectre; a phantom.

The day seems long, but night is tedious;
No sleep, but dreams; no dreams, but visions strange. Shelley.

Last night the very gods shew'd me a vision. Shakespeare.

God's mother deign'd to appear to me;

And, in a vision, full of majesty
Will'd me to leave my base vocation. Shakespeare.

Him God vouchsaf'd
To call by vision, from his father's house,
Into a land which he will shew him. Milton.

4. A dream; something shown in a dream.

A dream happens to a sleeping, a vision may happen to a waking man. A dream is supported natural, a vision miraculous; but they are confounded.

His dream returns; his friend appears again:
The murderer's come; now help, or I am slain!
'Twas but a vision still, and visions are but vain. Druden.

The idea of any thing in our mind no more proves the existence of that thing, than the visions of a dream make a true history. Locke.

VISIONARY. adj. [visionnaire, Fr. from vision.]

1. Affected by phantoms; disposed to receive impressions on the imagination.

No more these haunts my meditation aid,
Or hilt to rest the visionary mind. Pope.

2. Imaginary; not real; seen in a dream; perceived by the imagination only.

The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bray'd;
The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid. Dryden.

If you have any skill in dreams, let me know whether I have the same place in the real heart, that I had in the visionary one. Addison.

Our victories only led us to further visionary prospects; advantage was taken of the sanguine temper which success had wrought the nation up to. Swift.

VISIONARY. n. f. [visionnaire, French.]

1. One whose imagination is disturbed.

This account exceeded all the Noctambuli or visionaries I have met with.
The lovely visionary gave him perpetual uneasiness. Turner.

To VISIT. v. a. [visiter, Fr. visito, Lat.]

1. To go to see.

You must go visit the lady that lies so.—I visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither. Shakespeare.

2. [In scriptural language.] To tend good or evil judiciously.

When God visiteth, what shall I answer him? Job.

Thou shalt be visited of the Lord with thunder. Job.

God visit thee in good things. Job.

That venerable body is in little concern after what manner their mortal enemies intend to treat them, whenever God shall visit us with so fatal an event. Bayly.

3. To salute with a present.

Samson visited his wife with a kid. Judges.

4. To come to survey, with judicial authority.

The bishop ought to visit his diocese every year in person. Ashe.

To VISIT. v. n. To keep up the intercourse of ceremonial salutations at the houses of each other.

Whilst she was under her mother she was forced to be genteel, to live in ceremony, to sit up late at nights, to be in the fully of every fashion, and always visiting on Sundays. Law.

VISIT. n. f. [visite, Fr. from the verb]

The act of going to see another.

In a designed or accidental visit, let some one take a book, which may be agreeable, and read in it. Bate.

If this woman would make fewer visits, or be less always talkative, they would neither of them find it half so hard to be affected with religion. Law.

VISITABLE. adj. [from visit.] Liable to be visited.

All hospitals built since the reformation, are visitable by the king or lord chancellor. Ashe.

VISITANT. n. f. [from visit.] One who goes to see another.

He alone

To find where Adam shelter'd, took his way,
Not unperceiv'd of Adam, who to Eve,
While the great visitant approach'd, thus spake. Milton.

One visit begins an acquaintance; and when the visitant comes again, he is no more a stranger. South.

Edward the first, who had been a knight in Spain, upon action in the Holy Land, fixed his quarters by the measures of the east. Arbutnot.

Grief'd that a visitant to long should wait
Unmark'd, unhonour'd, at a monarch's gate, Infant he flew. Pope.

Acquainted with the world, and quite well bred,
Druid receives her visitants in bed. Young.

VISITATION. n. f. [visito, Lat.]

1. The act of visiting.

He comes not
Like to his father's greatness, his approach,
So out of circumstance and sudden, to his
'Tis not a visitation from'd, but fore'd
By need and accident. Shakespeare.

What would you with the princes?
—Nothing but peace and gentle visitation. Shakespeare.

2. Object of visits.

O flow'rs,
My early visitation, and my last. Milton.

3. [visitation, Fr.] Judicial visit or perambulation.

Your grace, in your metropolitan visitation, hath begun a good work, in taking this into your religious consideration; and you have endeavoured a reformation. Ashe.

The bishop ought to visit his diocese every year in person, unless he omits the same because he would not burthen his churches; and then ought to send his arch-deacon, which was the original of the arch-deacon's visitation. Ashe.

4. Judicial visitation by God; state of suffering judicially.

That which thou dost not understand when thou read'st, thou shalt understand in the day of thy visitation. For many secrets of religion are not perceived till they be felt, and are not felt in the day of a great calamity. Taylor.

5. Communication of divine love.
The most comfortable visitations God hath sent men from above, have taken especially the times of prayer as their most natural opportunities. Hooker.

VISITATORIAL, adj. [from visitator.] Belonging to a judicial visitor.

Some will have it, that an archdeacon does of common right execute this visitatorial power in his archdeaconry; but others say that an archdeacon has a visitatorial power only of common right per modum simplicis jurisdictionis, as being bishop's vicar. Ayliffe.

VISITER, n. f. [from visit.]

1. One who comes to see another.
Here's addo to lock up honesty and honour from the access of gentle visiters. Shakespeare.
You see this conclusion, this great flood of visiters.

Consumptives of this degree entertain their visitors with strange rambling discourses of their intend of going here and there. Harvey.
I have a large house, yet I should hardly prevail to find one visiter, if I were not able to lure him with a bottle of wine. Saunders.

2. [visiteur, Fr.] An occasional judge;
one who regulates the disorders of any society.

The visiters expelled the orthodox; they, without scruple or shame, possessed themselves of their colleges. Wotton.

To him you must your sickly state refer;
Your charter claims him as your visiter. Garth.
Whatever abuses have crept into the universities, might be reformed by strict injunctions to the visitors and heads of houses. Saunders.

VISITING, adj. [visit, Fr. visus, Latin.]
Formed in the act of seeing.

This happens when the axis of the vision concentrated from the object, fall not upon the same plane, but that which is conveyed into one eye is more depressed or elevated than that which enters the other. Kepler.

VISOMY, n. f. [corrupted from physionomy.] Face; countenance. Not in use.

Twelve gods do sit around in royal state,
And Jove in midst with awful majesty.
To judge the strife between their furious late:
Each of the gods by his like visage
Each to be known, but Jove above them all,
By his great looks and pow'r imperial. Spenser.

VISOR, n. f. [This word is variously written, visard, visar, visor, visard, visor. I prefer visor, as nearest the Latin visor, and concurring with visage, a kindred word: visiere, Fr.] A mask used to disguise and disguise. See VIZARD.

I fear, indeed, the weakness of my government before, made you think such a mask would be grateful unto me; and my weaker government now, makes you pull off the visor. Saunders.

This knaveish clown is such that you never saw so ill-favoured a visor; his behaviour such, that he is beyond the degree of ridiculous. Saunders.

By which decent doth mask in visor fair,
And cast her colours dyed deep in grays,
To seem like truth, whose shape the well can seem. Spenser.

But that thy face is, visor-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I would essay, proud queen, to make thee bluish. Shakespeare.

One visor remains,
And that is Claudio; I know him by his bearing. Shakespeare.

The Cyclops, a people of Sicily, remarkable for cruelty, might, perhaps, in their wars use a headpiece, or visor. Brown.

Swarms of knaves the visor quite disgrace,
And hide secure behind a masked face. Young.

VISORED, adj. [from visor.] Masked.

Hence with thy brew'd enchantments, foul deceiver!

Hast thou betray'd my credulous innocence
With visor'd falsehood and base forgery? Milton.

VISTA, n. f. [Italian.] View; prospect through an avenue.

In St. Peter's, when a man stands under the dome, if he looks upwards, he is astonished at the spacious hollow of the cupola, that makes one of the beautifullest vistas that the eye can pass through. Addison.

The finish'd garden to the view
Its vistas opens, and its alleys green. Thompson.

VISUAL, adj. [visuel, French.] Used in fight; exercising the power of sight; instrumental to sight.

An eye that looks to as it hangs a pretty distance by the visual nerve, hath been without any power of sight; and yet, after being replaced, recovered sight. Bacon.

Not think my hurt offends me; for my fire
Can scarce repose in it the visual fire. Chapman.

The air,
No where so clear, sharpen'd his visual ray
To objects distant far. Milton.

Then purg'd with euphrasy and rue
The visual nerve, for he had much to see. Milton.

VITAL, adj. [vitalis, Latin.]

1. Contributing to life; necessary to life.

His heart, broken with unkindness and affliction, stretched to far beyond his limits with this excess of comfort, as it was able no longer to keep safe his vital parts. Saunders.

All nature laughs, the groves are fresh and fair;
The sun's mild lustre warms the vital air. Pope.

2. Relating to life.
Let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny cord, and vile reproach. Shakespeare.

On the rock a scanty measure place
Of vital flax, and turn the wheel apace. Dryden.

3. Containing life.

Spirits that live throughout,
Vital in every part, not as frail man,
In vitals, heart, or head, liver or reins,
Cannot but by annihilating die. Milton.

On the watery calm
His broad wings the spirit of God outspreads;
And vital virtue infused, and vital warmth
Throughout the fluid mists. Milton.

4. Being the seat of life.
The dust flew on, and pierc'd a vital part. Pope.

5. So disposed as to live. Little used, and rather Latin than English.

Pythagoras and Hippocrates not only affirm the birth of the seventh month to be vital, that of the eighth mortal, but the progression thereto to be measured by rule. Brown.

6. Essential; chiefly necessary.

Know, grief's vital part Consists in nature, not in art. Bishop Corbet.

VITALITY, n. f. [from vital.] Power of subsisting in life.

Whether that motion, vitality and operation were by incubation, or how else, the manner is only known to God. Raleigh.

For the fecundity of species produced only by seed, providence hath endued all seed with a lasting vitality, that if by any accident it happen not to germinate the first year, it will continue its fecundity twenty or thirty years. Ray.

VITALLY, adv. [from vital.] In such a manner as to give life.

The organic structure of human bodies, whereby they are fitted to live and move, and be vitally informed by the soul, is the workmanship of a most wise, powerful, and beneficent maker. Bentley.

VITALS, n. f. [Without the singular.]
Parts essential to life.

By fits my swelling grief appears,
In rising sighs and falling tears,
That show too well the warm desires,
The heat, slow, consuming fires,
Which on my utmost vitals prey,
And melt my very soul away. Philips.

VITELLARY, n. f. [from vitellus, Latin.]

The place where the yolk of the egg swims in the white.

A greater difficulty in the doctrine of eggs is,
how the sperm of the cock attacheth into every egg;
since the vitellary or place of the yolk is very high. Brown.

To VITIATE, v. a. [vitio, Latin.] To deprave; to spoil; to make less pure.

The sun in his garden gives him the purity of visible objects, and of true nature before fire was vitiated by luxury. Locke.

The organs of speech are managed by too many muscles, that speech is not easily destroyed, though often from what vitiated as to some particular letter. Holder.

Spirits encountering foul bodies, and exciting a fermentation of those vitiated humours, precipitate into putrid fevers. Harvey.

This undistinguishing complaisance will vitiate the taste of the readers, and misguide many of them in their judgments, where to approve and where to censure. Garth.

A transposition of the order of the sacramental words, in some men's opinion, vitiates baptism. Ayliffe.

VITIATION, n. f. [from vitiate.] De-pravation; corruption.

The forward extension of the body is imputed to the blood's vitiation by malign putrid vapours smoking throughout the vessels. Harvey.

To VITILIGATE, v. n. [vitiosus and litigo, Latin.] To contend in law litigiously and cavilously.

VITILIGATION, n. f. [from vitiligate.]
Contention; cavillation.

I'll force you, by right ratiocination,
To leave your vitiligation. Hudibras.

VITIOSITY, n. f. [from vitiosus, Latin.]
Depravity; corruption.

He charges it wholly upon the corruption, perverseness, and vitiosity of man's will, as the only cause that rendered all the arguments his doctrine came clothed with, ineffectual. South.

VITIOUS, adj. [vicieux, French; vitiosus,
Latin.]

1. Corrupt; wicked; opposite to virtuous.
It is rather applied to habitual faults, than criminal actions. It is used of persons and practices.

Make known
It is no trivial blot, murder, or foulness
That hath deprav'd me of your grace. Shakespeare.

Witness the irreverent son
Of him who built the ark, who for the shame
Drove to his death, and laid his heavy curse,
'Servant of servants' on his vicious race. Milton.

What's what the vicious teach, the virtuous shun;
By tools 'tis hated, and by knives undone. Pope.
No troops abroad are to all disciplin'd as the English, which cannot well be otherwise, while the common soldiers have before their eyes the virtuous example of their leaders. Saunders.

2. Corrupt; having physical ill qualities.

When vicious language contends to be high, it is full of rock, mountain, and pointed dunes. B. Jun.

Here, from the virtuous air and sickly flocks,
A plague did on the dumb creation ride. Dryden.

VITIOUSLY, adv. [from vitious.] Not virtuously; corruptly.

VITIOUSNESS, n. f. [from vitious.] Cor-ruptness; state of being vitious.

When we in our viciousness grow lard,
The wise gods seal our eyes. Shakespeare.

What makes a governor justly detested is his vice and ill morals. Virtue must top the preacher's tongue and the ruler's scepter with authority. South.

VITREOUS, adj. [vitré, French; vitreus, Latin.] Glassy; consisting of glass; resembling glass.

The hole answers to the pupil of the eye; the crystalline humour to the lenticular glass; the dark room to the cavity containing the vitreous humour, and the white paper to the retina.

When the phlegm is too viscous, or separates into too great a quantity, it brings the blood into a morbid state; this viscous phlegm seems to be the vitreous petaine of the ancients.

VITREOUSNESS, n. f. [from vitreous.]

Resemblance of glass.

VITRIFICABLE, adj. [from vitricate.]

Convertible into glass.

To VITRIFICATE, v. a. [vitrum and facio, Latin.] To change into glass.

We have metals vis vitæ, and other materials, besides those of which you make glass.

VITRIFICATION, n. f. [vitrication, Fr. from vitricate.] Production of glass; act of changing, or of state of being changed into glass.

For vitrication likewise, what metals will endure it? Also, because vitrication is accounted a kind of death of metals, what vitrication will admit of turning back again, and what not?

If the heat be more fierce, it maketh the grodder part itself run and melt; as in the making of ordinary glass; and in the vitrication of earth in the inner parts of furnaces; and in the vitrication of brick and metals.

Upon the knowledge of the different ways of making minerals and metals capable of vitrication, depends the art of making counterfeits or fictitious gems.

To VITRIFY, v. a. [vitrifier, Fr. vitrum and facio, Latin.] To change into glass.

Metals will vitrify; and perhaps some portion of the glass of metal vitified, mixed in the pot of ordinary glass metal, will make the whole mass more tough.

Iron-slag, vitified, has in it cortices encompassing one another, like those in agates.

To VITRIFY, v. n. To become glass; to be changed into glass.

Chymists make vessels of animal substances calcined, which will not vitryfy in the fire: for all earth which hath any salt or oil in it, will turn to glass.

VITRIOL, n. f. [vitriol, French; vitriolum, Latin.]

Vitriol is produced by addition of a metallick matter with the fossil acid salt rubbed in with a vitriol-stone.

VITRIOLATE, } adj. [vitriolé, French; vitriolatus, Latin.]

Impregnated with vitriol; consisting of vitriol.

Iron may be dissolved by any tart, salt, or vitriolated water.

The water having dissolved the imperfectly calcined body, the vitriolate corpuscles swimming in the liquor, by their acrimonies constituted little masses of vitriol, which gave the water they impregnated a fair vitriolate colour.

VITRIOLICK, } adj. [vitriolique, French; vitriolous, } from vitriolum, Latin.]

Resembling vitriol; containing vitriol.

Copperose of Mars, by some called salt of steel, made by the spirits of vitriol or sulphur, well, after ablation, be attracted by the loadstone, and therefore whether those shooting salts partake but little of steel, and be not rather the vitriolous spirits fixed onto salt by the effluvia or odour of steel, is not without good question.

These salts have somewhat of a nitrous taste, but mixed with a smatch of a vitriolick.

By over-fermentation or long-keeping, wine becomes sharp, as in hock, like the vitriolick acidity.

VITULINE, adj. [vitulinus, Lat.] Belonging to a calf, or to veal.

VITUPERABLE, adj. [vituperabilis, Lat.] Blameworthy.

To VITUPERATE, v. a. [vituperer, Fr. vitupero, Lat.] To blame; to censure.

VITUPERATION, n. f. [vituperatio, Lat.] Blame; censure.

Such a writing ought to be clean, and free from any cavil or vituperation of satire.

VIVACIOUS, adj. [vivar, Latin.] 1. Long-lived.

Though we should allow them their perpetual calm and equability of heat, they will never be able to prove, that the reform men would be so vivacious as they would have us believe.

2. Sprightly; gay; active; lively.

VIVACIOUSNESS, } n. f. [vivacité, Fr. VIVACITY, } from vivacious.]

1. Liveliness; sprightliness. He had a great vivacity in his countenance.

2. Longevity; length of life. Fables are raised concerning the vivacity of deer: for neither are their gestation nor increment such as may afford an argument of long life.

3. Power of living. They are esteemed very hot in operation, and will, in a convenient air, survive some days the loss of their heads and hearts; so vigorous is their vivacity.

VIVARY, n. f. [vivarium, Latin.] A watten.

VIVE, adj. [vif, Fr. vivus, Lat.] Lively; forcible; pressing.

By a vive and forcible persuasion, he moved him to a war upon Flanders.

VIVENCY, n. f. [vivo, Lat.] Manner of suppoiting or continuing life, or vegetation.

Although not in a distinct and indisputable way of vivency, or answering in all points the property of plants, yet in inferior and defending constitution as they are determined by femmalities.

VIVES, n. f. A distemper among horses. Vives is much like the strangles, and the chief difference is, that for the most part the strangles happen to colts and young horses, while they are at grubs, by feeding with their heads down wards, by which means the swelling inclines more to the jaws; but the vives happens to horses at any age and time, and is more particularly seated in the glands and kernels under the ears.

VIVID, adj. [vididus, Latin.] 1. Lively; quick; striking.

The liquor, retaining its former vivid colour, was grown clear again.

To make these experiments the more manifest, such bodies ought to be chosen as have the fullest and most vivid colours, and two of those bodies compared together.

Ah! what neat his glossy varying dyes; The vivid green his flaming plumes unfold; His painted wings, and breast that flames with gold?

2. Sprightly; active. Body is a fit workhouse for sprightly vivid faculties to exercise and exert themselves in.

Where the genius is bright, and the imagination vivid, the power of memory may lose its improvement.

VIVIDLY, adv. [from vidid.] With life; with quickness; with strength.

In the moon we can, with excellent telescopes, discern many hills and valleys, whereof some are more and some less vividly illuminated; and others have a fainter, others a deeper shade.

Sensitive objects affect a man, in the state of this present life, much more warmly and vividly than those which affect only his nobler part, his mind.

VIVIDNESS, n. f. [from vidid.] Life; vigour; quickness.

VIVIFICAL, adj. [vivificus, Lat.] Giving life.

To VIVIFICATE, v. a. [vivifico, Lat.]

1. To make alive; to inform with life; to animate.

2. To recover from such a change of form as seems to destroy the essential properties. A chymical term.

VIVIFICATION, n. f. [vivification, Fr. from vivificare.] The act of giving life.

If that motion be in a certain order, there follows vivification and figuration.

VIVIFICK, adj. [vivifique, Fr. vivificus, Latin.] Giving life; making alive.

Without the sun's salutary and quick beams, all motion would cease, and nothing be left but darkness and death.

To VIVIFY, v. a. [vivifier, Fr. vivus and facio, Lat.] To make alive; to animate; to endure with life.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that there is a worm that breedeth in old snow, of a reddish colour, and dull of motion; which would show that snow hath in it a secret warmth, else it could hardly vivify.

Sitting on eggs doth vivify, not nourish. Out worms, as soon as vivified, creep into the stomach for nutriment.

VIVIPAROUS, adj. [vivus and parus, Latin.] Bringing the young alive opposed to oviparous.

When we perceive that bats have teats, it is not unreasonable to infer, they give suck; but where no other flying animals have these parts, we cannot from them infer a viviparous exclusion.

Their species might continue, though they had been viviparous; yet it would have brought their individuals to very small numbers.

It birds had been viviparous, the burthen of their womb had been too great and heavy, that their wings would have failed them.

VIXEN, n. f. Vixen, or fox, is the name of a fox, otherwise applied to a woman whose nature and conversation is thereby compared to a she-fox.

O! when she's angry, she is keen and shrew, She was a vixen, when she went to school, And though she be but little, she is fierce.

See a pack of spaniels, called lovers, making pursuit of a two-legged vixen, who only flies the whole loud pack, to be singled out by one.

VIZ, adv. [This word is videlicet, written with a contraction.] To wit; that is. A barbarous form of an unnecessary word.

That which to oft, by sundry writers, Has been applied to almost all fighters, More justly may be ascribed to this, Than any other warrior, viz.

None ever acted both parts bolder, Both of a chieftain and a soldier.

The chief of all signs which the Almighty endued man with, is human voice, and the several variations thereof by the organs of speech, and letters of the alphabet, formed by the several motions of the mouth.

Let this be done relatively, viz. one thing is more or stronger, calling the rest behind, and rendering it less sensible by its opposition.

VIZARD, n. f. [vizere, French. See VIZOR.] A mask used for disguise.

Let the fouts of the maskers be graciously, and be as become the person when the vizards are off.

Brought vizards in a civiler disguise. A lie is like a vizard, that may cover the face indeed, but can never become it.

Ye shall know them by their fims, not by their well or ill living; for they put on the vizard of seeming sanctity.

He mistook it for a very whimsical sort of mask, but upon a nearer view he found, that the field her vizard in her hand.

To VIZARD, v. [from the noun.] To mask.

Degree being awarded,
Th' unworthiest flows as fairly in the mask.

VIZIER. n. f. [properly vazir.] The prime minister of the Turkish empire.
He made him vizier, which is the chief of all the baffas.

This grand vizier presuming to invest
The chief imperial city of the west;
With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise,
His treasure, tents, and cannon, left a prize.
ULCER. n. f. [ulcere, French; ulcus, Latin.] A sore of continuance; not a new wound.

Thou answer'st, she is fair;
Pour'st in the open ulcer of my heart
Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice!

My ulcers swell,
Corrupt and fell.
Intestine stone and ulcer, colic pangs.
While he was dressing that opening, other abscesses were raised, and from the several apoplemsations fluorous ulcers were made.

ULCERATE. v. n. To turn to an ulcer.
ULCERATE. v. a. [ulcever, Fr. ulcero, Latin.] To diseafe with sores.

Some depend upon the intemperance of the part ulcerated; others upon the continual afflux of lacerative humours.
An acid and purulent matter mixeth with the blood, in such as have ulcers in the lungs.

ULCERATION. n. f. [ulceration, French; ulceratio, from ulcero, Latin.]
1. The act of breaking into ulcers.
2. Ulcer; sore.

The effects of mercury on ulcerations are manifest.
ULCERED. adj. [ulceré, French; from ulcer.] Grown by time from a hurt to an ulcer.

A leucopius went about with a dog and a flag-gout, the first for licking ulcered wounds, and the goat's milk for the ailes of the stomach.

ULCEROUS. adj. [ulcerosus, Latin.] Affected with old sores.

Strangely visited people,
All swollen and ulcerous, he cures.
An ulcerous disposition of the lungs, and an ulcer of the lungs, may be appropiately termed ulcers of a pulmonary consumption.

ULCEROUSNESS. n. f. [from ulcerous.] The state of being ulcerous.

ULGINOUS. adj. [uliginosus, Lat.] Shiny, muddy.

The uliginous lacteous matter taken notice of in the coral fountains upon the coast of Italy, was only a collection of the coralline particles.

ULTIMATE. adj. [ultimus, Latin.] Intended in the last resort; being the last in the train of consequences.

I would be at the worst; worst is my port,
My harbour, and my ultimate repose.

Many actions apt to procure fame, are not conducive to this our ultimate happiness.
The ultimate allotment of God to men, is really a consequence of their own voluntary choice, in doing good or evil.

ULTIMATELY. adv. [from ultimate.] In the last consequence.

Charity is more extensive than either of the two other graces, which center ultimately in ourselves; for we believe, and we hope for our own sake; but love, which is a more disinterested principle, carries us out of ourselves, into desires and endeavours of promoting the interests of other beings.

Trust in our own powers ultimately terminates in the friendship of other men, which these advantages add to us.

ULTIMITY. n. f. [ultimus, Latin.] The last stage; the last consequence. A word very convenient, but not in use.

Alteration of one body into another, from crudity to perfect concoction, is the ultimity of that process.

ULTRAMARINE. n. f. [ultra and marinus, Latin.] One of the noblest blue colours used in painting, produced by calcination from the stone called lapis lazuli.

Others, notwithstanding they are brown, cease not to be soft and taut, as the blue of ultramarine.

ULTRAMARINE. adj. [ultra marinus, Lat.] Being beyond the sea; foreign.

ULTRAMONTANE. adj. [ultramontain, Fr. ultra montanus, Latin.] Being beyond the mountains.

UMBER. n. f.

1. Umbur is a sad colour; which grind with gun water, and lighten it with a little cerule, and a shive of fishbone.

I'll put in, self in poor and me in a tatter,
And with a kind of umber touch my face.

Umbre is very legible and earthy, it is a smearing but pure black which can dispute with it.

The umbers, or blacks, and umbrat's found in the figures, are much finer than those found in the brush.

2. A fish. [thyrsallus, Latin.]

The umber and grayling differ as the herring and pucker do; but though they may do in other nations, those in England differ nothing but in their names.

UMBERED. adj. [from umber or umbra, Latin.] Shaded; clouded.

From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,
Fire in five's fire; and through their pale flames,
Each battle sees the other's umbered face.

UMBRICAL. adj. [umbricula, French; from umbilicus, Latin.] belonging to the navel.

Birds are nourished by umbrical veins, and the navel is manifest a day or two after excretion.

In a calf, the umbrical vessels terminate in certain bodies divided into a multitude of caecous papillae, received into fourty sockets of the navel, growing on the womb.

UMBLES. n. f. [umbles, French.] A deer's entrails.

UMBO. n. f. [Latin.] The pointed boss, or prominent part of a buckler.

Thy words together ty'd in mutual haiks,
Close as the Murettan phloxes;
Or like the umbo of the Romans,
Which scarce'st foes could break by no means.

UMBRAGE. n. f. [umbrage, French.]
1. Shade; screen of trees.

O, might I here
In solitude live savage; in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening!

Men twelfth'ning run
To grots and caves, and the cool umbrage seek
Of woven arbores.

2. Shadow; appearance.
The rest are umbrages quickly dispell'd; the astrologer subjects liberty to the motions of heaven.

The opinion carries no shew of truth nor umbrage of reason of its side.

Such a removal of the metal out of one part of the umbrage, and collecting of it in another, has melted some, and given umbrage to an opinion, that there is a growth of metal in one exposed to the air.

3. Repentment; offence; suspicion of injury.
Although he went on with the war, yet it should be but with his sword in his hand, to bend the stiffness of the other party to accept of peace; and for the king should take no umbrage of his arming and protection.

UMBRAGEOUS. adj. [umbragius, Fr.] Shady; yielding shade.

Umbrageous grots, and caves of cool recesses.

Walk daily in a pleasant, airy, and umbrageous garden.

The shining shower is scarce to patter heard,
Beneath the umbrageous multitude of leaves.

UMBRAGEOUSNESS. n. f. [from umbrageous.] Shadiness.

The exceeding umbrageousness of this tree, he compareth to the dark and shadow'd life of man; through which the sun of justice being not able to pierce, we have all remained in the shadow of death, till it pleased Christ to climb the tree of the cross, for our enlightening and redemption.

UMBRATILE. adj. [umbratilis, Lat.] Being in the shade.

UMBRIL. n. f. [from umbra, Latin.]
UMBRILLA. n. f. A skien used in hot countries to keep off the sun, and in others to beat off the rain.

I can carry your umbrella, and fan your lady's flap.

UMPIRAGE. n. f. [from umpire.] Arbitration; friendly decision of a controversy.

UMPIRE. n. f. [This word Minshew, with great applause from Skinner, derives from un pere, French, a father.] An arbitrator, one who, as a common friend, decides disputes. It is by Eron taken simply for a judge, in a sense not usual.

Give me some pretty countess, or, behold,
'Tis my extreme, and me, this bloody trade
Shall play the umpire, arbitrating that,
Which he commeth on of thy years and art
Could to no end, or to our honour bring.

Just death, and umpire of men's miseries,
With sweet enlargement doth diffuse me hence.

But as Wayne unkent led on the plumes,
And made the echo umpire of my braves.

The learned Skinner, in that book, takes not upon him to play the advocate for the umpire, but the umpire between them and the perpetuators.

UNADVENTUROUS. adj. Not adventurous.

The wisest, unexperienc'd, will be ever
Timorous and loth, with voice modestly Irresolute, unhardy, unadvent'rous. Milton.

UNADVISED. adj.

1. Imprudent; indiscreet.

Madam, I have unadvis'd Deliver'd you a paper that I should not. Shakespeare.

2. Done without due thought; rash.

This contract to-night
Is too rash, too unadvis'd, too sudden,
Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be,
Ere one can say, It lightens. Shakespeare.
These prosperous proceedings were turned back by the unadvised forwardness of divers chief counsellors, in making sudden and unreasonable alterations. Hammond.
Specifick conformities can be no unadvised productious; but are regulated by the immediate efficiency of some knowing agent. Glauville.

UNADVISEDLY. adv. Imprudently; rashly; indifferently.

A strange kind of speech to christen ears; and such as, I hope, they themselves do acknowledge unadvisedly uttered. Hooker.

What man's wit is there able to fathom the depth of those dangerous and fearful evils, whereinto our weak and impotent nature is inchumbled to sink itself;
rather than to shew an acknowledgment of error in that which once we have unadvisedly taken upon us to defend, against the stream of a contrary publick resolution? Hooker.

What is done cannot be now amended;
Men shall deal unadvisedly sometimes;
Which after-hours give leisure to repent of. Shakespeare.

A word unadvisedly spoken on the same tale, or misunderstood on the other, has raised such an aversion to him, as in time has produced a perfect hatred of him. South.

UNADULTERATED. adj. Genuine; not spoiled by spurious mixtures.

I have only discovered one of those channels by which the history of our Saviour might be conveyed pure and unadulterated. Addison.

UNAFFECTED. adj.

1. Real; not hypocritical.

They bore the long
To lie in solemn state, a publick sight:
Groans, cries, and howlings fill the crowded place,
And unaffected sorrow sat in every face. Druiden.

2. Free from affectation; open; candid; sincere.

The maid improves her charms
With inward greatness, unaffected wisdom,
And integrity of manners. Addison.

Of soft manners, unaffected mind:
Lover of peace, and friend of human kind. Pope.

3. Not formed by too rigid observation of rules; not laboured.

Men divinely taught, and better teaching
The solid rules of civil government,
In their majestic, unaffected stile,
Than all the oratory of Greece and Rome. Milton.

4. Not moved; not touched; as, he sat unaffected to hear the tragedy.

UNAFFECTEDLY. adv. Really; without any attempt to produce false appearances.

He was always unaffectedly cheerful, no marks of any thing heavy at his heart broke from him. Locke.

UNAFFECTING. adj. Not pathetick; not moving the passions.

UNAFFECTED, adj. Free from trouble.

My unaffected mind comforted suitable.

Advent'rous work! yet to thy power and mine
Not unagreeable, to round a path
Over this main, from hell to that new world. Milton.

UNAGREEABLENESS. n. f. Unsuitable-ness to; inconsistency with.

Papias, a holy man, and socolar of St. John, having delivered the millennium, men chose rather to admit a doctrine whose unagreeableness to the gospel economy rendered it suspicious, than think an apostolick man could seduce them. Deacy of Piety.

UNAIDABLE. adj. Not to be helped.

The congregated college have concluded,
That labouring art can never ransom nature
From her unaidable estate. Shakespeare.

UNAIDED. adj. Not assisted; not helped.

Their number, counting those th' unaided eye
Can see, or by invented tales defery,
The wide stretch of human thought exceeds. Blackmore.

UNAIDING. adj. Having no particular direction.

The noisy culverin, o'ercharg'd, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiding, in the rending sky,
Such trantick flights are like a madman's dream;
And nature suffers in the wild extreme. Granville.

UNAIDING. adj. Not feeling or causing pain.

Shew them th' unaiding fears which I would hide,
As if I had received them for the lure
Of then breath only. Shakespeare.

UNALTERABLE. adj. Not to be transferred.

Hereditary right should be kept sacred, not from any unalterable right in a particular family, but to avoid the consequences that usually attend the ambition of competitors. Steele.

UNALTERED. adj. Not impaired by bad mixtures.

Unalloyed satisfactions are joys too heavenly to fall to many men's shares on earth. Boyle.

UNALTERED. adj.

1. Having no powerful relation.

2. Having no common nature; not congenial.

He is compounded of two very different ingredients, spirit and matter; but how such unaltered and distinct portions of substance should set up in each other, so men's seeming yet could tell him. Collier.

UNALTERABLE. adj. Unchangeable; immutable.

The law of nature, consisting in a fixed, unalterable relation of one nature to another, is independent. South.

The first unalterable laws,
Sustaining the same relation to the same cause. Creech.

The truly upright man is indivisible in his uprightness, and unalterable in his purpose. Atterbury.

UNALTERABLENESS. n. f. Immutabi-lity; unchangeableness.

This happens from the unalterableness of the corpuscles which constitute and compose those bodies. Woodward.

UNALTERABLY. adv. Unchangeably; immutably.

Retain unalterably firm his love intruce. Myron.
The day and year are in order of measures, because they are unalterably constituted by those motions. Hobbes.

UNALTERED. adj. Not changed; not changeable.

It was thought in him an unpardonable offence to alter any thing in an unalterable, that are suber-any thing to remain unaltered. Hooker.

To whom our Saviour, with unalter'd brow:
Thy coming father, though I know thy scope,
I bid not, or forbud. Milton.

To shew the truth of my to alter'd I read,
Know, that your life was giv'n at my request. Dryden.

Since these forms begin, and have their end,
On some unalter'd cause they here depend. Dryden.
Grass and nuts pass often through animals unalter'd. Asbathout.

Amongst the shells that were fair, unaltered, and free from such mineral insinuations, there were some which could not be matched by any species of shell-fish now found upon the sea shores. Woodward.

UNAMAZED. adj. Not astonished; free from astonishment.

Thought at the view of much marveling; at length
Not unamaz'd, the thick forest broke. Milton.

UNAMBITION. adj. Free from ambition.

My humble mate, in ambitious trains,
Paints the green forest, and the flow'ry plains. Pope.

I am one of those unambitious people, who will have you forty years hence. Pope.

UNAMIDABLE. adj. [incomparable,
Lat.] Not to be changed for the better.

He is the true man, to is every one here that you know - mankind's unamidable. Deacy of Piety.

UNAMIDABLE. adj. Not willing to be.

Those who represent religion in an unamiable light, are like the boys led by Mithras, to make a discovery of the land of promise, when, by their reports, they dissuaded the people from entering upon it. Spectator.

Their men are so well acquainted with the unamiable part of themselves, that they have not the confidence to think they are really beloved. Spectator.

Nor are the hills unamiable, whole tops
To heaven's eye. Philips.

UNANIMATED. adj. Not resolved into simple parts.

Some large crystals of refined and unanimated matter, appeared to have each of them six flat sides. Boyle.

UNANCHORED. adj. Not anchored.

A post there is, moor'd on either side,
Where ships may rest, unanchored, and untied. Pope.

UNANSW'ED. adj. [un and knell.] Without the bell rung. This knell I doubt,

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand
Cut off, even in the blossoms of my sin,
Unhousel'd, unhonour'd, unan'd. Shakespeare.

UNANIMATED. adj. Not enlivened; not vivified.

Look on the half-lives as the imperfect products of a body made - like the frogs in the Nile, part knell'd into life, and part a lump of unimmortal unanimated matter. Dryden.

UNANIMITY. n. f. [unanimité, French.]
Agreement in design or opinion.

An to all party of men acting with unanimity, are infinitely greater in number, than the same party acting at the same end by different views. Addison.

UNANIMOUS. adj. [unanimus, Fr. unanmus, Lat.] Being of one mind, agreeing in design or opinion.

They went to meet
So oft in fix'd looks of joy and love
Unanimous, no tears of our great love, Hymn'd the eternal Father. Milton.

With those who have the field and Physique,
All feed in arms, unanims and true. Dryden.

UNANIMOUSLY. adv. [from unanimous.]
With one mind.

This particular is unanimously reported by all the ancient christian authors. Addison.

UNANIMOUSNESS. n. f. [from unanimi-ous.] The state of being unanimous.

UNANIMATED. adj.

1. Not animated.

2. Not prepared for death by extreme unction.

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand
Cut off, even in the blossoms of my sin,
Unhousel'd, unhonour'd, unan'd. Shakespeare.

UNANSWERABLE. adj. Not to be refuted.

This is a manifest and unanswerable argument.

I shall not conclude it false, though I think the emerging difficulties, which are its attendants, unanswerable. Glauville.

The pye's question was wisely let fall without a reply, to intima that it was unanswerable. Boylston.

These speculations are strong intimations, not only of the excellency of a human soul, but of its independence on the body; and if they do not prove, do at least confirm, these two great points, which are established by many other reasons that are unassailable.

As to the excuse drawn from the demands of necessity, it is but real, it is unanswerable. Attentive
UNANSWERABLE, adv. Beyond confutation.

It will put their little logick hard to it, to prove, that there can be any obedience where there is no command. And therefore it unanswerably follows, that the abettors of the tormented principle placed conference in a direct and bare-faced contradiction to God's express command. South.

UNANSWERED, adj.

1. Not opposed by a reply.

Must I namely hear
This arrogance unanswer'd? Thou 'rt a traitor. Adelphi.

2. Not confuted.

All these reasons, they say, have been brought, and were hitherto never answered; besides a number of arguments and jets unanswer'd like this. Hooker.

3. Not suitably returned.

Quench, Corydon, thy long unanswer'd fire;
Mind what the common wants of life require. Dryden.

UNAPPALLED, adj. Not daunted; not impressed by fear.

If my memory must thus be thrall'd
To that strange stroke, which conquer'd all my senses;
Can thoughts still thinking to rest unappall'd? Sidney

Infernal ghosts
Environ'd thee; some howl'd, some yell'd, some thrack'd;
Some bent at thee their fiery darts; while thou
Saw'st unappall'd in calm and silent peace. Milton.

As a lion, unappall'd with fear,
Springs on the toils, and rushes on the spear. Dryden.

Does this appear like guilt, when thus I come,
With eyes erect, and visage unappall'd,
Fixt on that awful face, I hand the charge;
Anna'd, not fearing? Smith.

UNAPPARELLED, adj. Not dressed; not clothed.

In Peru, though they were an unapparelled people, and had some curious very barbarous yet the government of the Incas had many parts of civility. Baron

Till our souls be unapparelled
Of bodies, they from this are banished. Donne.

UNAPPARENT, adj. Obsolete; not visible.

Thy potent voice he hears,
And longer will delay to hear thee tell
His generation, and the rising birth
Of nature, from the unapparent deep. Milton.

UNAPPASABLE, adj. Not to be pacified; implacable.

The unappassable rage of Hildebrand and his furious never left persecuting him, by raising one rebellion upon another. Raleigh.

I see thou art implacable; more deaf
To pray'st thou winds to seas, yet winds to seas
Are reconcil'd at length, and kiss to shore.
Thy anger, unappassable, still runs, es,
Eternal tempest never to be calm'd. Milton.

UNAPPEASED, adj. Not pacified.

Sacrifice his flesh,
That to the shadows he not unappeas'd. Shakespeare
His son forgot, his empire unappeas'd;
How soon the tyrant with new love is seiz'd! Dryden.

UNAPPLICABLE, adj. [from apply.] Such as cannot be applied.

Gratitude, by being confined to the few, has a very narrow province to work on, being acknowledged to be unapplicable, and so consequently ineffectual to all others. Hammond.

Their beloved earl of Manchester appeared now as unapplicable to their purposes as the other. Clarendon.

The singling out, and laying in order those intermediate ideas that demonstratively shew the equality or inequality of unapplicable quantities, has produced discoveries. Locke.

UNAPPREHENDED, adj. Not understood.

They of whom God is altogether unapprehended, are but few in number, and for grossness of wit such, that they hardly seem to hold the place of human being. Hooker.

UNAPPREHENSIVE, adj. [from apprehend.]

1. Not intelligent; not ready of conception.

The same temper of mind makes a man unapprehensive and insensible of any injury, suffered by others. South.

2. Not suspecting.

UNAPPROACHED, adj. Inaccessible.

God is light,
And never but in unapproach'd light
Dwelt from eternity. Milton.

UNAPPROVED, adj. [from approve.] Not approved.

Evil into the mind
May come and go to unapproved, and leave
No spot behind. Milton.

UNAPT, adj. [from apt.]

1. Dull; not apprehensive.

I am a soldier, and unapt to weep. Shakespeare.
My blood hath been too cool and temperate,
Unapt to fire at these indignities. Shakespeare.

2. Not ready; not propense.

3. Unfit; not qualified; with to before a verb, for before a noun.

Fear doth grow to an apprehension of deity induct with irresistible power to hurt, and is, of all ailments (unger excepted) the unapt to admit my conference with reason. Hooker.

A long time after sensual pleasures is a dissolution of the spirit of a man, and makes it loose, soft and wandering, unapt for noble, wide, or spiritual employments. Taylor.

4. Improper; unfit; unsuitable.

UNAPTLY, adv. [from unapt.] Unfitly; improperly.

He swims on his back; and the shape of his back seems to favour it, being very like the bottom of a boat; nor do his hinder legs unaptly resemble a pair of oars. Grew.

UNAPPESS, n. f. [from unapt.]

1. Unfitness; unsuitableness.

Men's apparel is commonly made according to their conditions, and their conditions are often governed by the arguments; for the person that is gowned, is by his gown put in mind of gravity, and also restrained from lightness by the very unapness of his weed. Spenser.

2. Dulness; want of apprehension.

That unapness made you minister
Thus to excite yourself. Shakespeare.

3. Unreadiness; disqualification; want of preparation.

The mind, by being engaged in a task beyond its strength, like the body strained by hitting at a weight too heavy, has often its force broken, and thereby gets an unapness or an aversion to any vigorous attempt ever after. Locke.

UNARGUED, adj. [from argue.]

1. Not disputed.

What thou bid'st,
Unargu'd I obey; to God ordains. Milton.

2. Not censured.

Not that his work liv'd in the hands of foes,
Unargu'd then, and yet hath fame from thine. Ben Jonson.

TO UNARM, v. a. [from arm.] To disarm; to strip of armour; to deprive of arms.

Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day. Shakespeare.
Unarm me, Eros; the long day's talk is done,
And we must sleep. Shakespeare.

Galen would not leave unto the world too subtle

a theory of unarm; warning thereby the males of venemous unarm. Brown.

UNARMED, adj. [from unarm.] Having no armour; having no weapons.

On the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy: to our shores
Through many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back. Shakespeare.

He all unarm'd
Shall chase thee with the terror of his voice
From thy demoniack holds, possession foul;
Thou and thy legions, yelling they shall fly,
And beg to hide them in a herd of swine. Milton.

Though unarm'd I am,
Here, without my sword or pointed lance,
Hope not, base man, unquellon'd hence to go. Dryden.

Whereas most other creatures are furnished with weapons for their defence; man is born altogether unarmed. Grew.

UNARRAIGNED, adj. Not brought to a trial.

As lawful lord, and king by just descent,
Should here be judg'd, unheard, and unarraign'd. Daniel.

UNARRAYED, adj. Not dressed.

As if this infant world yet unarray'd,
Naked and bare, in Nature's lap were laid. Dryden.
Half unarray'd, he ran to his relief,
So hally and to articles was his grief. Dryden.

UNARTFUL, adj.

1. Having no art, or cunning.

A cheerful sweetness in his looks he has,
And innocence unartful in his face. Dryden.

2. Wanting skill.

How unartful would it have been to have leath in a corner, when he was to have given light and warmth to all the bodies round him! Chapman.

UNARTFULLY, adv. In an unartful manner.

In the report, although it be not unartful, drawn, and is perfectly in the spirit of a pleasure, there is no great skill required to detect the unartful mistakes. Swift.

UNARTIFICIALLY, adv. Contrarily to art.

Not a feather is unartificially made, misshap'd, redundant, or defective. Dickens.

UNASKED, adj.

1. Not courted by solicitation.

With what eagerness, what circumstance
Unask'd, thou tak'st such pains to tell me only My ion's the better man. Shakespeare.

2. Not sought by entreaty or care.

The bearded corn cutu'd
From earth unask'd, nor was that earth renew'd. Dryden.

How, or why
Should all conspire to cheat us with a lie
Unask'd their pains, ungrateful then advice,
Starving then gain, and martyrdom their price. Dryden.

UNASPIRING, adj. Not ambitious.

To be modest and unaspiring, in honour preferring one another. Roger.

UNASSAILABLE, adj. Exempt from assault.

In the number, I do but know one,
That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unlink'd of motion. Shakespeare.

UNASSAILED, adj. Not attacked; not assaulted.

As I intend, Chifford, to thrive to-day,
It grieves my soul to have thee unassail'd. Shakespeare.

I believe
That he, the supreme good, to whom all things are
Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
Would send a glistering guard, if need were,
To keep my life and honour unassail'd. Milton.

UNASSAYED, adj. Unattempted.

What is faith, love, virtue unassay'd? Milton.
Alone, without exterior help furnish'd?

UNASSISTED, adj. Not helped.

Its victories were the stories of reason, unassisted
by the force of human power, and as gentle as the triumphs of light over darkness. Adams.

What unassisted reason could not discover, that God has not chosen before us in the revelation of the gospel; a state of immortal and unchangeable glory.

UNASSISTED. adj. Giving no help.

With these I went, a brother of the war;
Nor idle stood, with unassisting hands,
When savage beasts, and men's more savage bands,
Their virtuous toil subdu'd; yet these I sway'd.

Dryden.

UNASSU'MING. adj. Not arrogant.

Unassuming worth in secret liv'd

And died neglected.

Thomson.

UNASSU'RED. adj.

1. Not confident.

The ensuing treatise, with a timorous and unassured countenance, adventures into your preface.

Glauville.

2. Not to be trusted.

The doubts and dangers, the delays and woes,
The feigned friends, the unassured loves,
Do make a lover's life a wretch's hell.

Spenser.

UNATONED. adj. Not expiated.

Could you afford him such a bribe as that,
A brother's blood yet unatoned?

Rome.

UNATTA'INABLE. adj. Not to be gained or obtained; being out of reach.

Praise and prayer are God's due worship; which are unattainable by our discourse, simply considered, without the benefit of divine revelation.

Dryd.

I do not expect that men should be perfectly kept from error; that is more than human nature can, by any means, be advanced to: I aim at no such unattainable privilege; I only speak of what they should do.

Locke.

UNATTA'INABLENESS. n. f. State of being out of reach.

Desire is stopped by the opinion of the impossibility, or unattainableness of the good proposed.

Locke.

UNATTEMPTED. adj. Untried; not assayed.

He left no means unattempted of destroying his son.

Sidney.

Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,
When his fair angels would salute my palm;
But that my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar, raieth on the rich.

Shaksp.

Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme.

Milton.

Leave nothing unattempted to destroy
That perjurd race.

Denham.

Shall we be discouraged from any attempt of doing good, by the possibility of our failing in it? How many of the best things would, at this rate, have been left unattempted?

Atterbury.

UNATTEMPTED. adj.

1. Having no retinue, or attendants.

With goddess-like demeanor forth she went,
Not unattended.

Milton.

2. Having no followers.

Such unattended generals can never make a revolution in Parnassus.

Dryden.

3. Unaccompanied; forsaken.

Your constancy
Hath left you unattended.

Shakspere.

UNATTENDING. adj. Not attending.

Ill is lost that praise,
That is address'd to unattending ears.

Milton.

Ev'ry nymph of the wood, her tresses rendering,
Throws off her armolet of pearl in the morn;
Neptune in anguish his charge unattending,
Vessels are found'ring, and vows are in vain.

Dryden.

UNATTENTIVE. adj. Not regarding.

Man's nature is so unattentive to good, that there can scarce be too many monitors.

Government of the Tongue.

Such things are not accompanied with show, and therefore seldom draw the eyes of the unattentive.

Tatler.

UNAVAILABLE. adj. Useless; vain with respect to any purpose.

When we have undertaken to find out the strongest cause, where we should imagine that reading is so unavailing, that still we can learn is, that sermons are the ordinance of God, the scriptures dark, and the labour of reading only.

Howers.

UNAVAILING. adj. Useless; vain.

Since my inevitable death you know,
You safely unavailing pity show:

Dryden.

'Tis popular to mourn a dying foe,
Supine he tumbles on the trident's side.

Pope.

Before his helpless friends and native bands,
And spreads for aid his unavailing hands.

Pope.

UNAVOIDABLE. adj.

1. Inevitable; not to be shunned.

Oppression on one side, and ambition on the other, are the unavoidable occasions of war.

Dryd.

It is unavoidable to all, to have opinions, without certain proofs of their truth.

Locke.

Single acts of transgression will, through weakness and surprise, be unavoidable to the best guarded.

Rogers.

The merits of Christ will make up the unavoidable deficiencies of our service; will prevail for pardon to our sincere repentance.

Rogers.

All sentiments of worldly grandeur vanish at that unavoidable moment which decides the destiny of men.

Clayton.

2. Not to be missed in ratiocination.

That something is of itself, is self-evident, because we see things are; and the things that we see must either have had some first cause of their being, or have been always, and of themselves; one of them is unavoidable.

Tillotson.

I think it unavoidable for every rational creature, that will examine his own or any other existence, to have the notion of an eternal, wise being, who had no beginning.

Locke.

UNAVOIDABLENESS. n. f. Inevitability.

How can we conceive it subject to material impressions? and yet the importunity of pain, and unavoidablefulness of sensations, strongly persuade that we are so.

Glauville.

UNAVOIDABLY. adv. Inevitably.

The most perfect administration must unavoidably produce opposition from multitudes who are made happy by it.

Addison.

UNAVOIDED. adj. Inevitable.

We see the very wreck that we must suffer;
And unavoids is the danger now.

Shakspere.

Rare poems ask rare friends;
Yet satyrs, since the most of mankind be
Their unavoids subject, fewest see.

Ben Jonson.

UNAUTHORIZED. adj. Not supported by authority; not properly commissioned.

To kiss in private?

Shakspere.

An unauthor said this.

Shakspere.

It is for you to ravage seas and land,
Unauthoris'd by my supreme command.

Dryden.

UNAWARE. } adv. [from aware, or

UNAWARES. } wary.]

1. Without thought; without previous meditation.

Take heed lest you fall unawares into that inconvenience you formerly found fault with.

Spenser.

It is my father's face,
Whom, in this conflict, I unawares have kill'd.

Shakspere.

Firm we subsist; yet possible to swerve,
And fall into deception unware.

Milton.

A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before,
Of wine and honey mix'd; with added store
Of opium; to his keeper he brought,
Whom swallow'd unawares the sleepy draught,
And snor'd secure.

Dryden.

'Tis a sensation like that of a limb lopped off; one is trying every minute unawares to use it, and finds it is not.

Pope.

2. Unexpectedly; when it is not thought of; suddenly.

Left destruction come upon him at unawares,
And left his net that he hath hid, catch himself.

Psalms.

My hand, unawares to me, was, by the force of that endeavour it just before employed to sustain the fallen weight, carried up with such violence, that I bruised it.

Boyle.

Though we live never so long, we are still surprised: we put the evil day far from us, and then it catches us unawares, and we tremble at the prospect.

Waller.

3. In this sense I believe at unawares is the proper use.

He breaks at unawares upon our walks,
And, like a midnight wolf, invades the fold.

Dryden.

UNA'WED. adj. Unrestrained by fear or reverence.

The raging and sanatick distemper of the house of commons must be attributed to the want of such good ministers of the crown, as being unaw'd by any guilt of their own, could have watched other men's.

Clarendon.

Unfore'd by punishment, unaw'd by fear,
His words were simple and his soul sincere.

Dryden.

UNBACKED. adj.

1. Not tamed; not taught to bear the rider.

Then I bent my labor;
At which like unback'd colts, they prick'd their ears,

Advanc'd their eyelids, lifted up their noses,
As they smelt music.

Shakspere.

A well-wayed horse will safely convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unback'd filly may give thee a fall.

Shakspere.

They finish like unback'd fillies.

Danville.

2. Not contained; not aided.

Let the weight of thine own infamy
Fall on thee unsupported, and unback'd.

Daniel.

UNBALANCED. adj. Not poised; not in equipoise.

Let earth unbalance'd from her orbit fly,
Planets and suns run lawless through the sky.

Pope.

UNBALLAST. } adj. Not kept steady by

UNBALLASTED. } ballast; unsteady.

They having but newly left those grammatical flats, where they struck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable construction; and now on the sudden transported under another climate, to be tost and tumul'd with their unballast'd wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy, do, for the most part, grow into hatred of learning.

Milton.

As at sea th' unballast vessel rides,
Cast to and fro, the sport of winds and tides;

So, in the bounding chariot tost'd on high,
The youth is hurried headlong through the sky.

Addison.

UNBAND. } [from band.] Wanting

a string, or band.

Your hole should be ungartered, your honours unband'd, and every thing demonstrating a careless desolation.

Shakspere.

To UNBAR. v. a. [from bar.] To open,

by removing the bars; to unbolt.

'Tis not secure, this place or that to guard,
If any other entrance stand unbar'd.

Denham.

These rites the king refus'd,
Deaf to their cries; nor would the gates unbar
Of sacred peace, or loose th' imprison'd war.

Dryden.

UNBARBED. adj. [barba, Latin.] Not shaven. Out of use.

Must I go shew them my unbarbed scence?

Must my base tongue give to my noble heart
A lie?

Shakspere.

UNBARKED. adj. [from bark.] Decorticated; stripped of the bark.

A branch of a tree, unbarbed some space at the bottom, and so set in the ground, hath grown.

Bacon.

UNBARSHFUL. adj. Impudent; shameless.

Nor did I with unbarshful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility.

Shakspere.

UNBATE. adj. [from bate.] Not reprimed; not blunted.

Where is the horse, that doth untread again
His tedious measures with th' unbat'd fire

Shakspere.

UNBATHE. adj. [from bath.] Not wet.

Fierce Palmyra, their passage to prevent,
Thrust fall on Cymon's back in his descent:

Dryden.

The blade return'd unbathe'd, and to the handle bent.

Dryden.

UNBATTERED. adj. Not injured by blows.

I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms
Are bid to bear their slaves: or thou, Macbeth;
Or else my sword, with an unbutton'd edge,
I sheath again undeeded. Shakespeare.

TO UNBAY. v. a. To set open; to free from the restraint of mounds.

I ought now to loose the reins of my affections, to unbay the current of my passion, and love on without boundary or measure. Norris.

UNBEARING. adj. Bringing no fruit.

He with his pruning hook disjoins
Unbearing branches from their bair,
And grafts more happy in their stead. Dryden.

UNBEATEN. adj.

1. Not treated with blows.

His mare was truer than his chronicle;
For she had rode five miles unpur'd, unbeaten,
And then at last turn'd tail towards Neweaston. Bp. Corbet.

2. Not trodden.

We must tread unbeaten paths, and make a way where we do not find one; but it shall be always with a light in our hand. Bacon.

If your bold mule dare tread unbeaten paths. Rafcommon.

Virtue, to crown her fav'rites, loves to try
Some new, unbeaten passage to the sky. Swift.

UNBECOMING. adj. Indecent; unsuitable; indecorous.

Here's our chief guest.—
—If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all things unbecoming. Shakespeare.

No thought of sight,
None of retreat, no unbecoming deed
That argu'd fear. Milton.

I should rather believe that the nose was the seat of wrath in beasts than in mankind; and that it was unbecoming of any but Pan, who had very much of the beast in him, to wrinkle up his nose in anger. Dryden.

My grief lets unbecoming speeches fall:
I should have dy'd and not complain'd at all. Dryden.

This petulance in conversation prevails among some of that sex, where it appears the most unbecoming and unnatural. Addison.

Men of wit, learning, and virtue, might strike out every offensive or unbecoming passage from plays. Swift.

Each proceed upon debates without unbecoming warmth. Swift.

UNBECOMINGNESS. n. f. Indecency; indecorum.

If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the fault. Locke.

TO UNBED. v. a. To raise from a bed.

Eels unbed themselves, and stir at the noise of thunder. Walton.

UNBEFITTING. adj. Not becoming; not suitable.

Love is full of unbecfitting strains,
All wanton as a child, skipping in vain. Shaksp.

Far be it that I should write thee sin, or blame!
Or think thee unbecfitting holiest place. Milton.

He might several times have made peace with his disappointed subjects, upon terms not at all unbecfitting his dignity or interest; but he rather chose to sacrifice the whole alliance to his private passion. Swift.

TO UNBEGOT. v. a. To deprive of existence.

With each minute he could unbegot
Those rebel souls who dare usurp his seat. Dryden.

UNBEGOT.

UNBEGOTTEN. adj. [from begot.]

1. Eternal; without generation.

Why should he attribute the same honour to matter, which is subject to corruption, as to the eternal, unbegotten, and immutable God?

2. Not yet generated.

God omnipotent, making

Armies of possibleness; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot. Shaksp.

It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unborn, to being yet unbegot. Milton.

3. Not attaining existence.

Where a child finds his own parents his perversers, better were it for him to have been unborn and unbegot, than ask a blessing of those whose conversation breathes nothing but a curse. South.

TO UNBEGUILE. v. a. To undeceive; to set free from the influence of any deceit.

Then unbeguile thyself, and know with me,
That angels, though on earth employ'd they be,
Are still in heaven. Donne.

Their comeliest unbeguiled the vulgar of the odd opinion the loyalists had formerly infused into them, by their concionatory invectives. Hewel.

UNBEHELD. adj. Unseen; not discoverable to the sight.

These then, though unbeheld in deep of night,
Shine not in vain. Milton.

UNBELIEF. n. f.

1. Incredulity.

'Tis not vain or fabulous,
What the sage poets, taught by th' heav'nly muse,
Storied of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimeras, and enchanted isles,
And risted rocks, whose entrance leads to hell;
For such there be: but unbelief is blind. Milton.

I'm justly plagued by this your unbelief,
And am myself the cause of my own grief. Dryden.

Such an universal acquaintance with things will keep you from an excess of credulity and unbelief;
i. e. a readiness to believe or to deny every thing
at first hearing. Watts.

2. Infidelity; irreligion.

Where profess'd unbelief is, there can be no visible church of Christ; there may be where sound belief wanteth. Hooker.

TO UNBELIEVE. v. a.

1. To desert; not to trust.

Heav'n shield your grace from woe,
As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go! Shaksp.

So great a prince and favourite so suddenly in-transformed into travellers with no greater train, was enough to make any man unbelieve his five senses. Wotton.

2. Not to think real or true.

Nor less than sight and hearing could convince
Of such an unforcen and unbelieved offence. Dryden.

UNBELIEVER. n. f. An infidel; one who believes not the scripture of God.

The ancient fathers being often constrained to show what warrant they had so much to rely upon the scriptures, endeavour'd still to maintain the authority of the books of God, by arguments such as unbelievers themselves must needs think reasonable, if they judg'd thereof as they should. Hooker.

What endless war would jealous nations tear,
If none above did witness what they swear?
Sad fate of unbelievers, and yet just,
Among themselves to find so little trust. Waller.

In the New Testament, religion is usually expressed by faith in God and Christ, and the love of them. Hence it is that true christians are so frequently called believers; and wicked and ungodly men unbelievers. Tillotson.

He pronounces the children of such parents as were, one of them a christian, and the other an unbeliever, holy, on account of the faith and holiness of that one. Afterbury.

Men always grow vicious before they become unbelievers; but if you would once convince profligates by topics drawn from the view of their own quiet, reputation, and health, their infidelity would soon drop off. Swift.

UNBELIEVING. adj. Infidel.

No stay of slaughter found his vigorous arm;
But th' unbelieving squadrons turn'd to flight,
Smote in the rear. Philips.

This wrought the greatest confusion in the unbelieving Jews, and the greatest conviction in the gentiles. Addison.

In the days of the apostles, when all who professed themselves disciples of Christ were converts of conscience, this latter confession might be restrained to the unbelieving part of mankind. Rogers.

UNBELOVED. adj. Not loved.

Whoe'er you are, not unbelov'd by heav'n,
Since on our friendly shore your ships are driven. Dryden.

TO UNBEND. v. a.

1. To free from flexure.

It is lawful to relax and unbend our bow, but not to suffer it to be unready, or unstrung. Taylor.

I must be in the battle; but I'll go
With empty quiver, and unbended bow. Dryden.

2. To relax; to remit; to set at ease for a time.

Here have I seen the king, when great affairs,
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares,
Attended to the chase by all the flow'r of youth. Denham.

From those great cares when ease your soul
unbends,
Your pleasures are design'd to noble ends. Dryden.

3. To relax vitiously or effeminately.

You unbend your noble strength, to think
So brain-sickly of things. Shakespeare.

UNBENDING. adj.

1. Not suffering flexure.

Not so, when swift Camilla scours the plain, Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main. Pope.

2. Not yielding; resolute.

Ye noble few, who here unbending stand Beneath life's pressures, yet a little while,
And all your woes are past. Thomson.

3. Devoted to relaxation.

Since what was omitted in the acting is now kept in, I hope it may entertain your lordship at an unbending hour. Ross.

UNBENEFICED. adj. Not preferred to a benefice.

More vacant pulpits would more converts make,
All would have latitude enough to take:
The rest unbenefic'd your sects maintain. Dryden.

UNBENEFICENT. adj. Not kind.

A religion which not only forbids, but by its natural influence sweetens all bitterness and asperity of temper, and corrects that selfish narrowness of spirit which inclines men to a fierce unbeneficent behaviour. Rogers.

UNBENIGHTED. adj. Never visited by darkness.

Beyond the polar circles; to them day
Had unbenighted shone, while the low sun,
To recompense his distance, in their sight
Had rounded still the horizon. Milton.

UNBENIGN. adj. Malignant; malevo-lent.

To th' other five
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In fertile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy; and when to join
In synod unbeneign. Milton.

UNBENT. adj.

1. Not strained by the string.

Apollo heard, and, conquering his disdain,
Unbent his bow, and Greece inspir'd again. Dryden.

2. Having the bow unstrung.

Why hast thou gone so far,
To be unbent when thou hast ta'en thy stand,
Th' elected deer before thee? Shakespeare.

3. Not crushed; not subdued.

But thou, secure of soul, unbent with woe,
The more thy fortune frowns, the more opprobrious. Dryden.

4. Relaxed; not intent.

Be not always on affairs intent,
But let thy thoughts be easy and unent;
When our mind's eyes are disengag'd and free,
They clearer, farther, and distinctly see. Denham.

UNBESIMING. adj. Unbecoming.

No civility of manners transported me by the indignity of his manner, or by any thing unbecoming myself. King Charles.

The best of his people, him they idolise'd;
And thence proceeds my mortal hatred to him;
That, thus unblameable to all beside,
He err'd to me alone. Dryden.

UNBESOTTED. adj. Not intreated.
Left host should leave us, his timely care
Hath, unthought, provided; and his hands
Cloth'd us as new-born; paying while he judg'd.

UNBESTOWED. adj. Not given; not disposed of.
He had now but one son and one daughter unbestowed. Bacon.

UNBETRAYED. adj. Not betrayed.
Many being privy to the fact,
How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd? Daniel.

UNBEWAILED. adj. Not lamented.
Let determin'd things to destiny
Hold unbewail'd their way. Shakespeare.

TO UNBEWITCH. v. a. [from witch.] To free from fascination.

TO UNBIASS. v. a. To free from any external motive; to disentangle from prejudice.

That our understandings may be free to examine, and reason unbias'd give its judgment, being that whereon a right direction of our conduct to true happiness depends; it is in this we should employ our chief care. Locke.

The standing evidences of the gospel, every time they are considered, gain upon sincere, unbias'd minds. Atterbury.

The trust service a private man may do his country, is by unbiasing his mind, as much as possible, between the rival powers. Swift.

Where's the man who counsel can bestow,
Unbias'd or by favour or by spite;
Not dully prepos'd, nor blindly right? Pope.

UNBIASSEDLY. adv. Without external influence; without prejudice.

I have sought the true meaning; and have unbias'dly embraced what, upon a fair enquiry, appeared so to me. Locke.

UNBI'D. adj.

UNBI'DDEN. adj.

1. Uninvited.

Unbidden guests
Are often welcome when they are gone. Shakspeare.

2. Uncommanded; spontaneous.
Thorns also and thistles it shall bring thee forth Unbid. Milton.

Roses, unbid, and ev'ry fragrant flower,
Flew from their stalks, to strow thy nuptial bow'r.
Dryden.

Unbidden earth shall wreathing ivy bring,
And fragrant herbs, the promises of spring. Dryden.

UNBOTTLED. adj. Free from bigotry.
Erasmus, who was an unbottled Roman catholic, was so much transported with this passage of Socrates, that he could scarce forbear looking upon him as a saint, and desiring him to pray for him.
Addison.

TO UNB'ND. v. a. [from bind.] To loose; to untie.

His own woe's author, who bound it finds,
As did Pyrocles, and it wilfully unbinds. Spenser.

Ye Latian dames,
If there be here, who dare maintain
My right, nor think the name of mother vain,
Unbind your fillets, loose your flowing hair,
And o'erspread and nocturnal rites prepare. Dryden.

On the sixth instant it was thought fit to unbind his head. Tatler.

TO UNB'SHOP. v. a. [from bishop.] To deprive of episcopal orders.

I cannot look upon Titus as so far unbishop'd yet, but that he still exhibits to us all the essentials of jurisdiction. South.

UNBITTED. adj. [from bite.] Unbridled; unrestrained.

We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal fings, our unbitted lusts; whereof I take this love to be a feed or eye. Shakspeare.

UNBLAMABLE. adj. Not culpable; not to be charged with fault.

Much more could I say concerning this unblameable inequality of lines and rays. Bacon.

He lov'd his people, him they idolise'd;
And thence proceeds my mortal hatred to him;
That, thus unblameable to all beside,
He err'd to me alone. Dryden.

UNBLAMABLY. adv. Without taint of fault.

Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblameably we behaved ourselves.

UNBLAMED. adj. Blameless; free from fault.

Shall spend your days in joy unblam'd, and dwell
Long time in peace. Milton.

Unblam'd, abundance crown'd the royal board,
What time this dame rever'd her prudent lord,
Who now is doom'd to mourn. Pope.

UNBLEMISHED. adj. Free from turpitude; free from reproach; free from deformity.

O welcome, pure-ey'd faith, white-handed hope!
Thou hovering angel, girt with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity! Milton.

Under this flame lies virtue, youth,
Unblemish'd probity, and truth. Waller.

Is none worthy to be made a wife
In all this town? Suppose her free from strife, Rich, fair, and fruitful; of unblemish'd life. Dryden.

They appointed, out of these new converts, men of the best sense, and of the most unblemish'd lives;
to preside over these several assemblies. Addison.

UNBLENCED. adj. Not disgraced; not injured by any foil.

There, where very desolation dwells,
She may pass on with unblenc'd majesty;
Be it not done in pride, or in presumption. Milton.

UNBLEND. adj. Not mingled.
None can boast a knowledge deposite from de-flement, within this atmosphere of flesh; it dwells no where in unblended proportions on this side the empyreum. Glanville.

UNBLEST. adj.

1. Accursed; excluded from benediction.
It is a shameful and unblest thing, to take the scum of people, and wicked, condemned men, to be the people with whom you plant. Bacon.

2. Wretched; unhappy.
In thy pow'r
It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unblest, to being yet unbegot. Milton.

What is true passion, it unblest it dies?
And where is Emma's joy, if Henry flies? Prior.

UNBLOOD'D. adj. Not stained with blood.

Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest,
But may imagine how the bird was dead,
Although the kite soar with unblooded beak. Shakspeare.

UNBLOODY. adj. Not cruel; not shedding blood; not stained with blood.

Under the ledge of Atlas lies a cave,
The venerable seat of holy hermits,
Who there, secure in separated cells,
From the purring stream, and savage fruits,
Have wholesome beverage and unbloody meals. Dryden.

UNBLOWN. adj. Having the bud yet unexpanded.

Ah! my poor prince! Ah! my tender babes!
My unblown flowers, new-appearing sweets! Shakspeare.

UNBLUNTED. adj. Not becoming obtuse.

A sword, whose weight without a blow might slay;
Able, unblunted, to cut hosts away. Coutley.

UNBODIED. adj.

1. Incorporeal; immaterial.
If we could conceive of things as angels and un-bodied spirits do, without involving them in those clouds of language throws upon them, we should seldom be in danger of such mistakes as are perpetually committed. Watts.

2. Freed from the body.
She lieth the bonds broke of eternal night;
Her soul unbodied of the burd'ous corpse. Spenser.

All things are but alter'd, nothing dies;
And here and there th' unbody'd spirit flies. Dryden.

UNBOILED. adj. Not sodden.
A quarter of a pint of rice unboiled, will suffice to a pint boiled. Bacon.

TO UNBO'LT. v. a. To set open; to unbar.

I'll call my uncle down;
He shall unbolst the gates. Shakspeare.

UNBOLTED. adj. Coarse; gross; not refined, as flower, by bolting or sifting.

I will tread this unbolst villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him. Shakspeare.

UNBONNETED. adj. Wanting a hat or bonnet.

This night, wherein
The lion and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry; unbommeted he runs,
And bids what will, take all. Shakspeare.

UNBOO'KISH. adj.

1. Not studious of books.
2. Not cultivated by erudition.

As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad;
And his unbookish jealousy must construe
Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviour, Quite in the wrong. Shakspeare.

UNBO'RN. adj. Not yet brought into life; future; being to come.

Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming tow'rd me. Shakspeare.

The woe to come, the children yet unborn
Shall feel this day, as sharp to them as thorn. Shakspeare.

Never so much as in a thought unborn,
Did I offend you. Shakspeare.

He on the wings of cherubim
Up-lit, in paternal glory rode Far into chaos, and the world unborn. Milton.

To what wretched state reserv'd!
Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n
To be thus wasted from us? Milton.

A queen, from whom
The souls of kings unborn for bodies wait. Dryden.

UNBORROWED. adj. Genuine; native; one's own.

But the luxurious father of the fold
With native purple, and unborrow'd gold,
Beneath his pompous fleece shall proudly sweat. Dryden.

In substances, especially those which the common and unborrow'd names of any language are applied to, some remarkable sensible qualities serve to distinguish one from another. Locke.

TO UNBO'SOM. v. a.

1. To reveal in confidence.
I lov'd thee, as too well thou knew'st,
Too well, unbosom'd all my secrets to thee,
Not out of levity, but overpower'd
By thy request, who could deny thee nothing. Milton.

Do we unbosom all our secrets to him, and hide nothing that passeth in the depth of our hearts from him? Atterbury.

2. To open; to disclose.
Should I thence, hurried on viewless wing,
Take up a weeping on the mountain wild,
The gentle neighbourhood of grove and spring
Would soon unbosom all their echoes mild. Milton.

UNBOTTOMED. adj.

1. Without bottom; bottomless.
The dark, unbottom'd, infinite abyss. Milton.

2. Having no solid foundation; having no reliance.

This is a special act of christian hope, to be thus unbottomed of ourselves, and fashioned upon God, with a full reliance, trust, and dependence on his mercy. Hammond.

UNBOUGHT. adj.

1. Obtained without money.
The unbought similes of the poor. Dryden.

2. Not finding any purchaser.
The merchant will leave our native commodities unbought upon the hands of the farmer, rather than 5 11 2

U N B

export them to a market which will not afford him returns with profit. Locke.

UNBOUND. adj.

1. Loose; not tied.

2. Wanting a cover: used of books.

If that has complex ideas, without particular names for them, would be in no better case than a bookseller who had volumes that lay unbound, and without titles: which he could make known to others, only by shewing the loose sheets. Locke.

3. Proterit of unbind.

Some from their chains the faithful dogs unbound. Dryden.

UNBOUNDED. adj.

1. Infinite; interminable.

Long were to tell what I have done;
I voyaged the unreal, vast, unbounded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton.
The wide, th' unbounded prospect lies before me;
But shadows, clouds, and darkness rest upon it. Addison.

2. Unlimited; unrestrained.

He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes. Shakespeare.
He had given his curiosity its full, unbounded range, and examin'd not only in contemplation, but by sensitive experiment, whatever could be good for the sons of men. Decay of Piety.

UNBOUNDLESS. adv. Without bounds;
without limits.

So unboundedly mischievous is that petulant member, that heaven and earth are not wide enough for its range, but it will find work at home too. Government of the Tongue.

UNBOUNDEDNESS. n. f. Exemption from limits.

Finitude, applied to created things, imports the proportions of the several properties of these things to one another. Infinitude, the unboundedness of these degrees of properties. Cicero.

UNBOWED. adj. Not bent.

He knits his brow, and shews an angry eye,
And passeth by with stiff, unbowed knee,
Disdaining duty that to us belongs. Shakespeare.

TO UNBOWEL. v. a. To exenterate; to eviscerate.

In this chapter I'll unbowel the state of the question. Hale.

It is now become a new species of divinity, to branch out with fond distinctions our holy faith, which the pious simplicity of the first christians received to practice; not to read upon as an anatomy, unbowed and dissect to try experiments. Decay of Piety.

TO UNBRAVE. v. a.

1. To loose; to relax.

With whole reproach and odious menace,
The knight embowing in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and 'gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold. Spenser.

Somewhat of mournful sure my ears does wound;
Drums unbrac'd, with soldiers' broken cries. Dryden.

Nought shall the psaltry and the harp avail,
When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
And numbing coldness has unbrac'd the ear. Prior.

Wasting years, that wither human race,
Exhaust thy spirits, and thy arms unbrace. Pope.

2. To make the clothes loose.

Is it physical,
To walk unbrac'd, and suck up the humours
Of the dank morning? Shakespeare.
Händler, with his doublet all unbrac'd;
No hat upon his head, his stockings loose. Shakespeare.

UNBREATHED. adj. Not exercised.

They now have toil'd their unbreath'd memories
With this same plea against our nuptials. Shakespeare.

UNBREATHING. adj. Unanimated.

They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones,
Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale. Shakespeare.

UNBRED. adj.

U N B

1. Not instructed in civility; ill educated.

Unbred minds must be a little sent abroad.

Government of the Tongue.

Children learn from unbred or debauched servants, untowardly tricks. Locke.

Sure never any thing was so unbred as that odious man. Congreve.

2. Not taught: with to.

A warrior dame,
Unbred to spinning, in the loom unskill'd. Dryden.

UNBREECHED. adj. Having no breeches.

Looking on my boy's face, methought I did recoil

Twenty-three years, and saw myself unbreech'd,
In my green velvet coat. Shakespeare.

UNBRIED. adj. Not influenced by money or gifts; not hired.

The soul gave all:

Unbri'd it gave; or, if a bribe appear,
No less than heav'n. Dryden.

To succour the distress'd;

Unbri'd by love; untern'd by threats. A. Philips.

UNBRI'DLED. adj. Licentious; not restrained.

This is not well, rash and unbri'dled boy,

To fly the favours of so good a king. Shakespeare.

To what licence

Dares thy unbri'dled boldness run itself? B. Jonson.

We have considered religious zeal, which transgresses in unbri'dled excess. Spratt.

UNBROKE. adj. [from break.]

1. Not violated.

God pardon all oaths that are broke to me;

God keep all vows unbroke, are made to thee. Shakespeare.

Some married persons, even in their marriage, do please God, by preserving their faith unbroke. Taylor.

He first broke peace in heav'n, and faith, till then Milton.

2. Not subdued; not weakened.

From his seat the Pylion prince arose:

Two centuries already he fulfill'd;

And now began the third, unbroke yet. Dryden.

How broad his shoulders spread ' by age unbroke' Pope.

3. Not tamed.

A lonely cow.

Unworn with yokes, unbroke to the plow. Addison.

UNBROTHERLIKE. adj. Ill suiting with

UNBROTHERLY. adj. the character of a brother.

Victor's unbrotherlike heat towards the eastern churches, fomented that difference about Easter into a schism. Decay of Piety.

UNBRUISED. adj. Not bruised; not hurt.

On Dardan plains,

The fresh, and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions. Shakespeare.

Care keeps his watch in ev'ry old man's eye:

And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie;

But where unbruised youth, with unsift brain,
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign. Shakespeare.

TO UNBUCKLE. v. a. To loose from buckles.

We have been down together in my sleep,

Unbuckling helms; sitting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakespeare.

He that unbuckles this, till we do please

To doff 't for our purpose, shall hear a storm. Shakespeare.

His starry helm unbuckled, shew'd him prime

In manhood, where youth ended. Milton.

All unbuckling the rich mail they wore,
Laid their bright arms along the sable shore. Pope.

TO UNBUILD. v. a. To raze; to destroy.

This is the way to kindle, not to quench;

To unbuild the city, and to lay all flat. Shakespeare.

U N C

What with they then but unbuild
His living temples, built by faith to stand;
Their own faith, not another's? Milton.

UNBUILT. adj. Not yet erected.

Built walls you thus, unbuilt you see. Dryden.

UNBURIED. adj. Not interred; not honoured with the rites of funeral.

Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburied yet,

To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx? Shakespeare.

The mists, which groweth upon the skull of a dead man unburied, will staunch blood potently. Bacon.

Him double cares attend,

For his unburied soldiers, and his friend. Dryden.

Breathless he lies, and his unbury'd ghost,

Depriv'd of funeral rites, pollutes your host. Dryden.

The wand'ring ghosts

Of kings unbury'd on the waked coasts. Pope.

UNBURNED. adj.

UNBURN'T. adj.

1. Not consumed; not wasted; not injured by fire.

Creon denies the rites of fun'ral fires to those,

Whose breathless bodies yet he calls his toes,
Unburn'd, unburied, on a heap they lie. Dryden.

2. Not heated with fire.

Burnt wine is more hard and astringent, than wine unburnt. Bacon.

UNBURNING. adj. Not consuming by heat.

What we have said of the unburning fire called light, streaming from the flame of a candle, may easily be applied to all other light deprived of sensible heat. Dryden.

TO UNBURDEN. v. a.

1. To rid of a load.

We'll shake all cares and business from our side,

Conferring them on younger strengths; while we Unburden'd crawl tow'rd death. Shakespeare.

2. To throw off.

Sharp Buckingham unburthens with his tongue

The envious load that lies upon his heart. Shakespeare.

3. To disclose what lies heavy on the mind.

From your love I have a warranty

To unburthen all my plots and purposes,
How to get clear of all the debts I owe. Shakespeare.

TO UNBUTTON. v. a. To loose any thing buttoned.

Thou art fat-witted with drinking old sack, and unbuttoning thee after supper. Shakespeare.

Many catch cold on the breast, by leaving their doublets unbuttoned. Horne.

This silk waistcoat was unbuttoned in several places. Addison.

UNCALCINED. adj. Free from calcina-
tion.

A saline substance, subtler than sal ammoniac, carried up with it uncalcined gold in the form of subtle exhalations. Boyle.

UNCALLED. adj. Not summoned; not sent for; not demanded.

Basilus had servants, who, though they came not uncall'd, yet at call were ready. Sidney.

He, bolder now, uncall'd before her stood. Milton.

Mild Lucina came uncall'd, and stood

Beside the struggling boughs, and heard the groan,
Then reach'd her midwife hand to speed the throes. Dryden.

TO UNCALM. v. a. To disturb. A harsh word.

What strange disquiet has uncalm'd your breast?

Inhuman fair, to rob the dead of rest? Dryden.

UNCANCELLED. adj. Not erased; not abrogated.

I only mourn my yet uncancel'd score;

You put me past the pow'r of paying more. Dryden.

UNCANONICAL. adj. Not agreeable to the canons.

UNCAPTABLE. adj. Incapable, Fr. incapable, [Lat.] Not capturable; not susceptible.

Now more frequently incapable.

*Though not come to witness
A fiery adversary, an insidious wretch,
Unsusceptible of pity, void and empty
From any dream of mercy.* Shakespeare.

He who believes himself unsusceptible of pardon, goes on without any care of reforming. Hammond.
This, whilst they are under the deceit of it, makes them unsusceptible of conviction; and they applaud themselves as zealous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for error. Locke.

UNCA'RED for. adj. Not regarded; not attended to.

Their kings, to better their worldly estate, left their own and their people's ghastly condition un- cared for.

UNCA'RNATE. adj. Not fleshly.

Nor need we be afraid to ascribe that to the incarnate son, which sometimes is attributed unto the uncarnate father. Brown.

To UNCA'SE. v. a.

1. To disengage from any covering.

See Pompey is uncovering for the combat. Shaksp.
Thou shalt be master, Tranio, in my sword.
'Tis hatch'd, and shall be so: Tranio, at once
Uncover thee; take my colour'd hat and cloak.

Shakespeare.
Uncover me, and do with me what you please.
Addison.

2. To slay; to strip.

All men him uncover'd 'gan deride. Ilub. Tale.
Partly by his voice, and partly by his ears, the ass was discovered; and consequently uncover'd, well laughed at, and well cudgelled. L'Estrange.

UNCA'UGHT. adj. Not yet caught.

Let him fly far;
Not in this land shall he remain uncaught;
And found, dispatch'd. Shakespeare.
His bosom glows with treasures yet uncaught.
Gay.

UNCA'USED. adj. Having no precedent cause.

UNCA'UTIONS. adj. Not wary; heedless.

Unforeseen, they say, is unprepar'd:

Uncautions Arctite thought himself alone. Dryden.

UNCE'LEBRATED. adj. Not solemnized.

Thus was the first day, ev'n and morn;
Nor pass'd uncelebrated, nor untung
By the celestial chorus. Milton.

UNCE'NSURED. adj. Exempt from publick reproach.

How difficult must it be for any ruler to live un- cenfured, where every one at the community is thus qualified for modelling the constitution! Addison.

Fear most to tax an honourable soul,
Whole right it is uncensur'd to be dull. Pope.
To be uncensur'd, and to be obscure, is the same thing. Pope.

UNCE'RTAIN. adj. [uncertain, Fr. incertus,
Latin.]

1. Doubtful; not certainly known.

That sacred pile, so vast, so high,
That whether 'tis a part of earth or sky,
Uncertain seems; and may be thought a proud Aspiring mountain, or descending cloud. Denham.

2. Doubtful; not having certain knowledge.

Man, without the protection of a superior being,
is secure of nothing that he enjoys, and uncertain of every thing that he hopes for. Tillotson.

Condemn'd on Cacusas to lie,

Sill to be dying, not to die;

With certain pain, uncertain of relief,
True emblem of a wretched lover's grief. Graville.

3. Not sure in the consequence.

I must be married to my brother's daughter,
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass:
Nurture her brothers, and then marry her!
Uncertain way of gain! Shakespeare.

In the bright air the faulchion shone,
Or whistling sings dismiss'd th' uncertain stone. Gay.

The search of our future being is but a needless, anxious, and uncertain business; for we know, sooner than we can, what, whilst all this solicitude, we shall know a little later. Pope.

4. Not exact; not sure.

Africanus young, and eager of his game,
Soon bent his bow, uncertain in his aim;
But the dire bend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through his panting sides. Dryden.

5. Unsettled; unregular.

As the form of our publick service is not voluntary, so neither are the parts thereof uncertain; but they are all set down in such order, and with such choice, as hath, in the wisdom of the church, seem'd best. Hooker.

UNCE'RTAINED. adj. Made uncertain.
A word not used.

The diversity of senses are not so uncertain'd by the sun and moon alone, who always keep one and the same course, but that the stars have also their working therein. Raleigh.

UNCE'RTAINLY. adv.

1. Not surely; not certainly.

Go, mortals, now, and vex yourselves in vain
For wealth, which so uncertainly must come:
When what was brought so far, and with such pain,
Was only kept to lose it nearer home. Dryden.
Names must be of very unsteady meaning, if the ideas be referred to standards without us, that cannot be known at all, or but very imperfectly and uncertainly. Locke.

2. Not confidently.

They that are past all hope of good, are past
All fear of ill; and yet, if he be dead,
Speak softly, or uncertainly. Denham.

UNCE'RTAINTY. n. f.

1. Dubiousness; want of knowledge.

All great concerns must delays endure;
Rashness and haste make all things unsecure:
And if uncertain thy pretensions be,
Stay till fit time wear out uncertainty. Denham.
You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate,
Here then remain with your uncertainty;
Let ev'ry feeble ramour shake your hearts. Shaksp.

2. Inaccuracy.

That which makes doubtfulness and uncertainty
in the signification of some, more than other words, is the difference of ideas they stand for. Locke.

3. Contingency; want of certainty.

God's omniscience is a light shining into every dark corner, steadfastly grasping the greatest and most slippery uncertainty. South.

4. Something unknown.

Our shepherd's staff is every man's case, that quits a moral certainty for an uncertainty, and leaps from the honest habitus he was brought up to, into a trade he has no skill in. L'Estrange.

To UNCHA'IN. v. a. To free from chains.

Minerva thus to Perseus lent her shield,
Secure of conquest, sent him to the field:
The hero asked what the queen ordain'd;
'So was his home complete, and Andromeda un-
chain'd. Pope.

UNCHA'NGEABLE. adj. Immutably; not subject to variation.

If the end for which a law provideth, be perpetually necessary, and the way whereby it provideth perpetually also most apt, no doubt but that every such law ought for ever to remain unchangeable.
Hooker.

UNCHA'NGEABLENESS. n. f. Immutability.

This unchangeableness of colour I am now to describe. Newton.

UNCHA'NGEABLY. adv. Immutably; without change.

All truth is unchangeably the same; that proposition, which is true at any time, bring to for ever.
South.

Her first order, disposition, frame,
Must then subsist unchangeably the same. Blackm.

UNCHA'NGED. adj.

1. Not altered.

When our fortunes are violently changed, our spirits are unchanged. Taylor.
More safe I sing with mortal voice unchang'd.
To house, or mute. Milton.

2. Not alterable.

Dismiss thy fear,
And heav'n's unchang'd decrees attentive hear:
More pow'ful gods have torn thee from thy side. Dryden.

Honour unchang'd, a principle profess,
Fixt to one side, but mud'rate to the rest. Pope.
UNCHA'NGING. adj. Suffering no alteration.

But that thy face is, vizor-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I would essay, proud quon, to make thee blush. Shakespeare.

True expression, like th' unchanging sun,
Clears and improves whatever it shines upon:
It gilds all objects, but it alters none. Pope.

To UNCHA'NGE. v. a. To retract an accusation.

Even his mother shall uncharge the practice,
And call it accident. Shakespeare.

UNCHA'RITABLE. adj. Contrary to charity; contrary to the universal love prescribed by christianity.

All the rich mines of learning ransack'd are
To furnish ammunition for this war;
Uncharitable zeal our reason whets,
And double edges on our passion sets. Denham.

This fills the minds of weak men with uncharita- ble interpretations of those actions of which they are not competent judges. Addison.

UNCHA'RITABLENESS. n. f. Want of charity.

The penitence of the criminal may have num-ber'd him among the taints, when our unretreated uncharitableness may tend us to unquenchable flames. Government of the Tongue.

God commands us to love our enemies, so that if we hate them we sin, and are justly kept back by our own uncharitableness. Kettleswell.
Heaven and hell are the proper regions of mercy and uncharitableness. Atterbury.

UNCHA'RITABLY. adv. In a manner contrary to charity.

I did not mean the cutting off all that nation with the sword; which, far be it from me that I should ever think so desperately, or with so uncharitably.
Spencer.

Urgo neither charity nor shame to me;
Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd. Shakespeare.

Men, imprudently and uncharitably often, employ their zeal for persons. Spence.

UNCHA'RY. adj. Not wary; not cautious; not frugal.

I've said too much unto a heart of stone,
And laid my honour too unchary out. Shakespeare.
UNCHA'STE. adj. Lewd; libidinous; not continent; not chaste; not pure.

One, that in divers places I had heard before blamed, as the most impudently unchaste woman of all Asia. Sidney.

In my master's garments,
Which he intrud'd from me, away he poils
With unchaste purposes, to violate
My lady's honour. Shakespeare.

Whoever is unchaste, cannot reverence himself;
and the reverence of a man's self is, next religion,
the chiefest bridle of all vices. Bacon.

Lust, by unchaste looks,
Lets in desilement to the inward parts. Milton.

If she thinks to be separated by reason of her husband's unchaste life, then the man will be un-creably ruined. Taylor.

UNCHA'STITY. n. f. Lewdness; incon-tinence.

That generation was more particularly addicted to intemperance, sensuality, and unchastity. Woodward.

When the sun is among the horned signs, he may produce such a spirit of unchastity, as is dangerous to the honour of your worship's families. Arbucknot.

UNCHE'CKED. adj.

1. Unrestrained; not hindered.

Apt the mind, or fancy, to rove
Uncheck'd, and of her roving is no end. Milton.

Then on the wing thy uncheck'd vigour bore,
To wander freely, or securely soar.
Smith to J. Phillips.

3. Not contradicted.

What news on the Rhylo?
—Why, yet it lives there uncheck'd, that Antonio hath a ship of rich lading wreck'd. Shaksp.

UNCHEERFULNESS. n. f. Melancholy; gloominess of temper.

Many, by a natural uncheerfulness of heart, love to indulge this uncomfortable way of life. Spectator.

He hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury. Shakspere.

UNCHRISTIAN. adj.

Contrary to the laws of christianity.
It's uncharitable, unchristian, and inhuman, to pass a peremptory sentence of condemnation upon a try'd friend, where there is any room left for a more favourable judgment. L'Estrange.

These unchristianishers of men are fatally caught in their own nets. South.
I could dispense with the unphilosophicalness of this their hypothesis, were it not unchristian. Norris.

2. Unconverted; infidel.

Whereupon grew a question, whether a christian soldier might herein do as the unchristian did, and wear as they wore. Hooker.

UNCHRISTIANNESS. n. f. Contrariety to christianity.

The unchristianness of those denials might arise from a displeasure to see me prefer my own divines before their ministers. King Charles.

UNCIRCUMCISED. adj. Not circumcised; not a Jew.

Th' uncircumcis'd snail'd grimly with disdain. Cowley.

UNCIRCUMCISION. n. f. Omission of circumcision.

God, that gives the law that a Jew shall be circumcised, thereby constitutes uncircumcision an obliquity; which, had he not given that law, had never been such. Hammond.

UNCIRCUMSCRIBED. adj. Unbounded; unlimited.

Though I, uncircumscrib'd myself, retire,
And put not forth my goodness. Milton.

An arbitrary prince is the master of a non-resisting people; for where the power is uncircumscrib'd, the obedience ought to be unlimited. Addison.

The sovereign was flattered by a set of men into a persuasion that the regal authority was unlimited and uncircumscrib'd. Addison.

UNCIRCUMSPECT. adj. Not cautious; not vigilant.

Their uncircumspect simplicity had been used, especially in matters of religion. Hayward.

UNCIRCUMSTANTIAL. adj. Unimportant.

A bad word.
The like particulars, although they seem uncircumstantial, are oft set down in holy scripture. Brown.

UNCIVIL. adj. [incivil, Fr. incivile, Lat.] Unpolite; not agreeable to rules of elegance, or complaisance.

Your undutiful, uncivil, and uncharitable dealing in this your book, hath detected you. Whitgift.

One ounce of whey unclarified; one ounce of oil of vitriol, make no apparent alteration. Bacon.

To UNCLASP. v. a. To open what is shut with clasps.

Thou know'st no less, but all; I have unclasp'd
To thee the book, e'en of my secret soul. Shaksp.

Prayer can unclasp the girdles of the north, saying to a mountain of ice, Be thou removed hence, and cast into the sea. Taylor.

UNCLASSICK. adj. Not classick.

Angel of dulness, sent to scatter round
Her magick charms o'er all unclassick ground. Pope.

UNCLER. n. f. [uncle, Fr.] The brother of one's father or mother.

Hamlet punishes his uncle rather for his own death, than the murder of his father. Shakspere.

UNCLEAN. adj.

1. Foul; dirty; filthy.

A fordid god: down from his hoary chin
A length of beard descends, uncomb'd, unclean. Dryden.

Priests are patterns for the rest;
The gold of heav'n, who bear the god imprest'd:
But when the precious coin is kept unclean,
The sov'reign's image is no longer seen.
If they be foul, on whom the people trust,
Well may the baser brass contract a rust. Dryden.

2. Not purified by ritual practices.

3. Foul with sin.

Besides, how vile, contemptible, ridiculous,
What act more execrably unclean, profane? Milton.

What agonies must he endure, what difficulties overcome, before he can cleanse himself from the pollutions of sin, and be a fit inhabitant of that holy place, where no unclean thing shall enter? Rogers.

4. Lewd; unchaste.

Let them all encircle him about,
And, fairy-like too, punch the unclean knight,
And ask him, why that hoar of fairy revel,
In their so sacred paths he dares to tread,
In shape profane. Shakspere.

Some tree, whose broad, smooth leaves together
few'd,
And girded on our loins, may cover round
Those middle parts; that this new comer, shame,
There sit not, and reproach us as unclean. Milton.

Adultery of the heart, consisting of inordinate and unclean affections. Perkins.

UNCLEANLINESS. n. f. Want of cleanliness.

This profane liberty and uncleanliness, the archbishop resolved to reform. Clarendon.

UNCLEANLY. adj.

1. Foul; filthy; nasty.

Civet is of a baser birth than tar;
The very uncleanly flux of a cat. Shakspere.

The hero to his enterprise recalls;
His fist unclenches, and the weapon falls. Gord.

UNCLIPPED. adj. Whole; not cut.

As soon as there began a distinction between clipped and unclipped money, bullion arose. Locke.

To UNCLUT. v. a. To strip; to make naked.

The boughs and branches are never unclashed and left naked. Ratcliff.

Poor orphans' minds are left as unclashed and naked altogether, as their bodies. Atterbury.

Cover the couch over with thick woollen clothes,
the warmth whereof will make it come presently,
which once perceived, forthwith unclash it. Mortimer.

To a distinct knowledge of things, we must recleath them of all those mixtures, that we may contemplate them naked, and in their own nature. Watts.

To UNCLUG. v. a.

1. To disencumber; to exonerate.

Could I meet 'em
But once a-day, it would unclug my heart
Of what lies heavy to 't. Shakspere.

All great, all royal, shine divinely bright. Bozom.

Blest with temper, whose unclouded ray
Can make to-morrow cheerful as to-day. Pope.

UNCLOUDEDNESS. n. f. Openness; freedom from gloom.

The love I would persuade, makes nothing more conducive to it, than the greatest uncloudedness of the eye, and the perfectest illustration of the object, which is such, that the clearest reason is the most advantageous light it can desire to be seen by. Bayle.

UNCLOUDY. adj. Free from a cloud.

Now night in silent, begins to rise,
And twinkling orbs begin th' uncloudy skies;
Her borrow'd lustre growing Cynthia leads. Cry.

To UNCLUTCH. v. a. To open.

If the terrors of the Lord could not melt his bowels, unclutch his gripping hand, or disengage him from his prey; yet sure it must discourage him from grasping of heaven too. Devy of Pitt.

To UNCOIL. v. a. To pull the cap off.

Yonder are two apple-women scolding, and just ready to uncoil one another. Arbutnot on Pope.

the greatest master of poetry, he wanted that easiness, that air of freedom and unconstrained, which is more sensibly to be perceived than described.
Fulton.

UNCONSULTING. adj. [inconsultus, Lat.]
Heady; rash; improvident; imprudent.
It was the fair Zellane, Plexirtus's daughter, whom unconconsulting affection, unfortunately born to me, had made borrow too much of her natural modesty, as to leave her more decent rayments.
Sidney.

UNCONSUMED. adj. Not wasted; not destroyed by any wasting power.

Hope never comes,
That comes to all, but torture without end
Still urges, and a fiery deluge fed
With ever-burning sulphur unconsum'd. Milton.
Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire unconsum'd, is an idea that always accompanies our complex ideas, signified by the word gold. Locke.

UNCONSUMMATE. adj. Not consummated.
Acron came to the fight,
Who left his spouse betroth'd, and unconsummated night. Dryden.

The pension was granted, by reason of the king of England's uncontrollable title to England.
Hayward.

This makes appear the error of those, who think it an uncontrollable maxim, that power is always safely lodg'd in many hands, than in one; that many are as capable of enslaving as a single person.
Swift.

UNCONTROLLABLE. adv.

1. Without possibility of opposition.

2. Without danger of refutation.

Uncontrollably, and under general consent, many opinions are pass'd, which, upon due examination, admit of doubt. Brown.
Since this light was to rest within them, and the judgment of it wholly to remain in themselves, they might safely and uncontrollably pretend it greater or less. South.

UNCONTROLL'D. adj.

1. Unresisted; unopposed; not to be overruled.

Should I try the uncontroll'd worth
Of this pure cause, 'twould kindle my rap't spirits
To such a flame of sacred vehemence,
That dumb things would be mov'd to sympathize.
Milton.

O'er barren mountains, o'er the flow'ry plain,
Extends thy uncontroll'd, and boundless reign.
Dryden.

The British navy, uncontroll'd,
Shall wave her double cross 't' extreme climate Terrific, and return with odorous spoils. Philips.

UNCONVERTED. adj.

1. Not persuaded of the truth of christianity.

Salvation belongeth unto none, but such as call upon the name of our Lord Jesus Christ: which nations, as yet unconverted, neither do, nor possibly can do, till they believe. Hosker.

The unconverted heathens, who were press'd by the many authorities that confirmed our Saviour's miracles, accounted for them after the same manner. Addison.

The apostle reminds the Ephesians of the guilt and misery of their former unconverted estate, when aliens from the commonwealth of Israel.
Rogers.

Her wit was more than man, her innocence a child. Dryden.

UNDEFINABLE. adj. Not to be marked out, or circumscribed by a definition.

That which is indefinite, though it hath bounds, as not being infinite, yet those bounds to us are undefinable. Crew.

Why simple ideas are undefinable is, that the several terms of a definition, signifying several ideas, they can all, by no means, represent an idea, which has no composition at all. Locke.

UNDEFINED. adj. Not circumscribed, or explained by a definition.

There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round with legions of obscure, doubtful, undefined words. Locke.

UNDEFORMED. adj. Not deformed; not disfigured.

The light of so many gallant fellows, with all

Watson.

UNDERLING n. f. [from under.] An inferior agent; a sorry, mean fellow.

The great men, by ambition never satisfied, grew fastious; and the underlings, glad indeed to be underlings to them they hated least, to preserve them from such they hated most.

Sidney.

Hereby the heads of the Septs are made stronger, whom it should be a most special policy to weaken, and to set up and strengthen divers of their underlings against them.

Spenser.

The fault is not in our stars,

But in ourselves, that we are underlings. Shaksp.

O'er all his brethren he shall reign as king,

Yet every one shall make him underling. Milton.

They may print this letter, if the underlings at the post-office take a copy of it.

Pope and Swift.

TO UNDERMINE v. a. [under and mine.]

1. To dig cavities under any thing, so that it may fall, or be blown up; to sap.

Though the foundation on a rock were laid,

The church was undermin'd, and then betray'd.

Danbarn.

An injudicious endeavour to exalt Virgil, is much the same as if one should think to raise the superstructure by undermining the foundation.

Pope.

2. To excavate under.

UND

A vast rock undermin'd from one end to the other, and a highway running through it as long and as broad as the Mall. Addison.

3. To injure by clandestine means.

Making the king's sword strike whom they hated, the king's purse reward whom they loved; and, which is worst of all, making the royal countenance serve to undermine the royal sovereignty.

Steuart.

They, knowing Eleanor's aspiring humour,

Have bid'd me to undermine the datchbold. Shaksp.

The father, secure,

Ventures his filial virtue

Against what'er or may tempt, what'er seduce,

Allure or terrify, or undermine. Milton.

The undermining little becomes habitual; and the drift of his plausible conversation is only to flatter one, that he may betray another.

Dryden.

He should be warned who are like to undermine him, and who to serve him.

Locke.

UNDERMINER n. f. [from undermine.]

1. He that saps; he that digs away the supports.

2. A clandestine enemy.

The enemies and underminers thereof are Romish catholics.

Bacon.

When I perceiv'd all set on enmity,

As on my enemies where ever chance'd,

I us'd hostility, and took their spoil,

To pay my underminers in their coin. Milton.

The most experienced disturbers and underminers of government have always laid their first train in contempt, endeavouring to blow it up in the judgment and esteem of the subject.

South.

UNDERMOST adj. [This is a kind of superlative, anomalously formed from under.]

1. Lowest in place.

Using oil of almonds, we drew up with the undermost stone a much greater weight.

Boyle.

2. Lowest in state or condition.

It happens well for the party that is undermost, when a work of this nature falls into the hands of those who content themselves to attack their principles, without expiating their persons.

Addison.

This opinion, taken by other sectaries, was to last no longer than they were undermost.

Atterbury.

UNDERNEATH adv. [Compounded from under and neath, of which we still retain the comparative neath, but in adverbial sense use beneath.] In the lower place;

below; under; beneath.

Fortwith up to the clouds

With him I flew, and underneath beheld

The earth outstretch'd immense, a prospect wide.

Milton.

And as I wake, sweet music broathe

Above, about, or underneath

Sent by some spirit to mortals good.

Milton.

Or follen Mole that rummets under neath,

Or Severn swift, guilty of maiden's death.

Milton.

The murther caught in open day,

Includ'd, and in despair to fly away,

How horrible from underneath.

Dryden.

The state did not lie flat upon it, but left a free passage underneath.

Addison.

UNDERNEATH prep. Under.

Fellows in arms,

Brav'd underneath the yoke of tyranny.

Thus far into the bowels of the land:

Have we march'd on.

Shakspere.

Pray God the prove not masculine ere long!

If underneath the standard of the French

She carry armour, as he hath begun.

Shakspere.

Underneath this stone doth lie

As much beauty as could die;

Which in life did harbour give

To more virtue than could live.

Ben Jonson.

What is, hath been; what hath been, shall ensue;

And nothing underneath the sun is new.

Shakspere.

The north and south, and each contending brook,

Are underneath his wide dominion cast.

Dryden.

UNDEROFFICER n. f. [under and officer.]

An inferior officer; one in subordinate authority.

Intelligence; terms of communication.

He which speaketh no more than ediseth, is undeservedly reprehended for much speaking. Mackay.

These oft an undeservedly laudal. Nikola.

His outward freedom
 Science distinguishes a man of honour from one of those athletic brutes, whose undeservedly we call heroes. Dryden.

UNDESERVED. *n. f. One of no merit.

You see how men of merit are sought after; the underdeserver may sleep, when the man of action is called on. Shakespeare.

UNDESERVING. *adj.

1. Not having merit; not having any worth.

It exerts itself promiscuously towards the deserv- ing and the undeserving, it it relieves alike the idle and the indigent. Addison.

Shall we repine at a little misplaced charity when an all wise Being showers down every day his benefits on the unthankful and undeserving? Atterb.

Who lose a length of undeserving days,
 Would you usurp the lover's dear-bought prize? Pope.

2. Not meriting any particular advantage or hurt; with of.

I was carried to dislike, then to hate; lastly, to destroy this fun underriding of destruction. Sidney.

My felicity is in retaining the good opinion of honest men, who think us not quite undeserving of it. Pope.

UNDESIGNED. *adj. Not intended; not purposed.

Great effects by inconsiderable means are sometimes brought about; and those which are intended by such as are the immediate authors. South.

Where you conduct find,
 Use and convenience; will you not agree,
 That such effects could not be undesign'd,
 Nor could proceed but from a knowing mind? Blackmore.

UNDESIGNING. *adj.

1. Not acting with any set purpose.

Could atoms, which, with undesign'd flight,
 Roam'd through the void, and roag'd the nooks of night,
 In order march, and to their posts advance,
 Led by no guide, but undesigning chance? Blackm.

2. Having no artful or fraudulent schemes; sincere.

He looks upon friendship, gratitude, and sense of honour, as terms to impose upon weak, undesigning minds.

UNDESIRABLE. adj. Not to be wished; not pleasing.

To add what wants
In female sex, there seems to draw his love,
And under me more equal; and perhaps,
A thing not undesigning some time
Superior; for judgment, what is free? Milton.
UNDESIRABLE. adj. Not wished; not solicited.

O goddess-mother, give me back to fate;
Yours gift was undesired, and came too late. Dryden.

UNDERRING. adj. Negligent; not wishing.

The baits of gifts and money to despise,
And look on wealth with underriving eyes:
When thou canst truly call these virtuous thine,
Be wise, and free, by heav'n's consent and mine. Dryden.

UNDESTRUCTIBLE. adj. Indestructible; not susceptible of destruction. Not in use.

Common glass, once made, so far resists the violence of the fire, that most chymists think it a body more undestructible than gold itself. Boyle.

UNDESTRUCTED. adj. Not destroyed.

The essences of those species are preserved whole and undestroyed, whatever changes happen to any, or all of the individuals. Locke.

UNDETERMINABLE. adj. Impossible to be decided.

On either side the fight was fierce, and surely undeterminable without the death of one of the chiefs. Watson.

Rather an heir had no such right by divine institution, than that God should give such a right, but yet leave it doubtful and undeterminable who such heir is. Locke.

UNDETERMINATE. adj.

1. Not settled; not decided; contingent. Regularly, indeterminate.

Surely the Son of God could not die by chance, nor the greatest thing that ever came to pass in nature be left to an undeterminate event. South.

I still accounted myself undiminished of my largest conceit. King Charles.

Think not, revolted spirit! thy shape the same,
Or undiminish'd brightness, to be known
As when thou stood'st in heav'n, upright and pure. Milton.

Sergius, who a bad cause bravely try'd,
All of a piece, and undiminish'd, dy'd. Dryden.

The deathless muse, with undiminish'd rays,
Through distant times the lovely dame conveys. Addison.

When sacrilegious hands had rased the church even to the foundation, these charities they suffered to stand undiminish'd, untouched. Atterbury.

UNDINTED. adj. Not impressed by a blow.

I must rid all the sea of pirates: this I greed upon,
To part with unhack'd edges, and bear back
Our barge undinted. Shakespeare.

UNDIPPED. adj. [un and dip.] Not dipped; not plunged.

I think thee
Impenetrably good; but, like Achilles,
Thou hadst a soft Egyptian heel undipp'd,
And that has made thee mortal. Dryden.

UNDIRECTED. adj. Not directed.

The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, amidst all the raging surges, unruled and undirected of any: for they to whom she was committed, fainted or forsook their charge. Spenser.

Could atoms, which, with undirected flight, Roam'd through the void, and rang'd the realms of night.

Of reason destitute, without intent,
In order march? Blackmore.

UNDISCOVERED. adj. Not observed; not discovered; not descried.

Our profession, though it leadeth us into many truths undiscerned by others, yet doth disturb their communications. Brown.

Broken they break, and rallying they renew,
In other forms, the military shew:
At last in order undiscern'd they join,
And march together in a friendly line. Dryden.

UNDISCOVEREDLY. adv. So as to be undiscovered.

Some associated particles of salt-petre, by lurking undiscernedly in the fixed nitre, had escaped the analysing violence of the fire. Boyle.

UNDISCOVERIBLE. adj. Not to be discerned; invisible.

I should be guiltier than my guiltiness,
To think I should be undiscernible,
When I perceive your grace. Shakespeare.

The apostle, knowing that the distinction of their characters was undiscernible by men in this life, admonishes those, who had the most comfortable assurances of God's favour, to be nevertheless apprehensive. Rogers.

UNDISCOVERIBLY. adv. Invisibly; imperceptibly.

Many secret indispositions will undiscernibly seal

upon the soul, and it will require time and due application to discover it to the spirituality of religion.

UNDISCOVERING. adj. Intrudicious; incapable of making due distinction.

Undiscerning muse, which heart, which eyes,
In this new couple dost thou prize?
His long experience informed him well of the state of England; but of foreign transactions he was entirely undiscerning and ignorant. Clarendon.

Thus her blind sister, sickle fortune, reigns,
And undiscerning scatters crowns and chains. Pope.

UNDISCIPLINED. adj.

1. Not subdued to regularity and order.
To be disciplined withal is an argument of natural infirmary, if it be necessary; but if it be not, it signifies an undisciplined and unmortified spirit. Taylor.

Divided from those climes where art prevails,
Undisciplin'd by precepts of the wife,
Our inborn passions will not brook controul;
We follow nature. Philips.

2. Untaught; uninstructed.

A gallant man had rather fight to great disadvantage in the field, in an orderly way, than dabble with an undisciplined rabble. K. Charles.

Dry is a man of a clear head, but few words, and gains the same advantage over Puzos, that a small body of regular troops would gain over a numberless undisciplin'd militia. Spectator.

UNDISCORDING. adj. Not disagreeing, not jarring in music.

We on earth, with undiscording voice,
May rightly answer that melodious noise;
As once we did, till disproportion'd sin
Jurr'd against nature's chime. Milton.

UNDISCOVERABLE. adj. Not to be found out.

He was to make up his accounts, and by an art, undiscoverable cheat, he could provide against the impending distress. Rogers.

UNDISCOVERED. adj. Not seen; not discovered; not found out.

Coming into the falling of a way, which led us into a place, of each side whereof men might easily keep themselves undiscovered, I was encouraged suddenly by a great troop of enemies. South.

When the griefs of Job were exceeding great, his words accordingly to open them were many, he be it, still unto his seeming they were undiscovered. Hobbes.

Time glides, with undiscover'd haste;
The future but a length behind the past. Dryden.

By your counsels we are brought to view
A rich and undiscover'd world in you. Dryden.

In such passages I discover'd some beauty yet undiscover'd. Dryden.

How inconceivable is it, that a spiritual, i. e. an unextended substance, should represent to the mind an extended one, as a triangle! Locke.

UNEXTINGUISHABLE. adj. [inextinguibile, French.] Unquenchable; not to be put out.

U N F

... of unextinguishable fire
 Make exarose us, without hope of end. Milton.
 What nature, unextinguishable beauty must be imperfect through the whole, which the defecation of so many parts by a bad printer, and a worse editor, could not hinder from shining forth! Bentley.
UNEXTINGUISHED. adj. [inextinctus,
 Latin.]

1. Not quenched; not put out.
 The souls, whom that unhappy flame invades,
 Make endless moans, and, pining with desire,
 Lament too late their unextinguish'd fire. Dryden.
 'Tisn o'er your cold, your ever-seem'd urn
 His constant flame shall unextinguish'd burn. Lyttleton.

 me with being in your debt. Swift.

UNFAIRLY. adv. [from unfa'ir.] Not in a just manner.

UNFAITHFUL. adj.
 1. Perfidious; treacherous.
 If you break one jot of your promise, I will think you the most atheistical liar of the age, and the most unworthy, that may be clothed out of the gods' band of the unfaithful. Shakespeare.
 My feet, through wine, unfaithful to their weight,
 Betray'd me tumbling from a tow'ry height. Pope.

2. Impious; infidel.
 Thence shall come
 To judge th' unfaithful dead; but to reward
 His faithful, and receive them into bliss. Milton.
UNFAITHFULLY. adv. Treacherously; perfidiously.

There is danger of being unfaithfully counselled;
 and more for the good of them that counsel, than for him that is counselled. Bacon.

UNFAITHFULNESS. n. s. Treachery; perfidiousness.
 As the obscurity of what some writers deliver, makes it very difficult to be understood; so the unfaithfulness of too many others, makes it unfit to be relied on. Bayle.

 able.]

1. Not according to the fashion.
 2. Unartfully.
 Deform'd, unfa'ishon'd, sent before my time
 Into this breathing world, scarce half made up;
 And that so lamely and unfashionably,
 That dogs bark at me. Shakespeare.

UNFA'SHIONED. adj.
 1. Not modified by art.
 Mark but how terribly his eyes appear;
 And yet there's something roughly noble there;
 Which, in unfa'ishon'd nature, looks divine.
 And, like a gem, does in the quarry shine. Dryden.
 2. Having no regular form.
 A hick'd lump, unfa'ishon'd and unfa'rm'd,
 Of inbred seeds, and jostly chaos nam'd. Dryden.

TO UNFA'STER. v. a. To loose; to un-fix.
 He had no sooner unfa'ster'd his hold, but that a wave forcibly spoiled his weaker hand of hold. Sidney.

Then in the key hole turns
 Th' intricate wards, and every bolt and bar,
 Of iron, iron, or solid lock, with ease Unfa'sters. Milton.

UNFA'THERED. adj. Fatherless; having no father.

They do observe Unfa'ther'd heirs, and leathly births of nature. Shakespeare.

UNFA'ITHOMABLE. adj.

 The more thou tellest, grips his fit the faster. Pope.

UNFA'IGNED. adj. Not counterfeited; not hypocritical; real; sincere.
 Here I take the like unfa'igned bath,
 Never to marry her. Shakespeare.
 Thousand deceancies that daily flow
 From all her words and actions mix'd with love,
 And sweet compliances, which declare unfa'igned
 Union of mind. Milton.
 Sorrow unfa'igned, and humiliation meek.
 Employ it in unfa'igned pity towards God. Sparr.

UNFA'IGNEDLY. adv. Really; sincerely;
 without hypocrisy.
 He pardoneth all them that truly repent, and un-feign'dly believe his holy gospel. Common Prayer.
 How should they be unfa'ignedly just, whom religion doth not enable to be such; or they religious, which are not found such by the proof of their just actions? Hooker.

Pincee Dauphin, can you love this lady? —
 —I love her most unfa'ignedly! Shakespeare.
 Thou hast brought me and my people unfa'ignedly to repent of the sins we have committed. King Charles.

UNFELT. adj. Not felt; not perceived.
 All my treasury
 Is but yet unfa'elt thanks, which, more enrich'd,
 Shall be your love and labour's recompence. Shakespeare.
 Her looks, now that time, unfa'elt Sweeten'd into my heart, unfa'elt before. Milton.
 'Tis pleasant, safely to behold from shore
 The rowling ships, and hear the tempest roar;
 Not that mother's pain is our delight,
 But pains unfa'elt produce the pleasing sight. Dryden.

UNFENC'D. adj.
 1. Naked of fortification.
 I'd play incessantly upon these judes;
 Even till unfa'enc'd desolation
 Leave the masqued with the vulgar air. Shakespeare.
 2. Not surrounded by any enclosure.

UNFERMENTED. adj. Not fermented.
 All such vegetables must be unfermented; for fermentation changes their nature. Arbuthnot.

UNFA'ITILE. adj. Not fruitful; not prolific.
 There is not such a dry tree, such a sapless, un-fa'itile thing, but that it might fruitfully and increase. Deacy of Poetry.

TO UNFA'ITER. v. a. To unchain; to free from shackles.
 Unfa'iter me with speed;
 I see you trouble that I bleed. Dryden.

This most useful principle may be unfa'itile, and referred to its own freedom of exercise. Spectator.
 The soul in the unfa'itile is not entirely loose and unfa'itile from the body. Spectator.
 Th' unfa'itile mood by three subm'd. Thomson.

 form.
 In unfa'itured paintings the noblest is the imitation of man, and of architecture, as arches, free zee. Bottom.

UNFA'ILLED. adj. Not filled; not supplied.
 Come not to table, but when thy need invites there; and if thou beest in health, leave something of thy appetite unfa'illed. Taylor.

The air did unf precisely fill up the vacuities of the vessel, since it left so many unfilled. Boyle.
The thrice of my forefathers
Still stands unfilled. Addison.

UNFULFILL'G. adj. Unfuitable to a son;

You offer him a wrong,
Something unfulfill'g. Shakspeare.
Teach the people, that to hope for heaven is a mercenary, legal, and therefore unfulfill'g, affection. Boyle.

UNFINISHED. adj. Incomplete; not brought to an end; not brought to perfection; imperfect; wanting the last hand.

It is for that such outward ornament
Was lavish'd on their sex, that inward gifts
Were left for hallo unfinish'd. Milton.
I did dedicate to you a very unfinished piece. Dryden.

His hasty hand left his pictures so unfinished, that the beauty in the picture faded sooner than in the person after whom it was drawn. Spectator.
And now let conscious Cecil view the piece,
Where virtue in her loveliest light is shown;
Let these unfinish'd lays in part express
Your great forefather's bounties, and your own. Leigh.

This collection contains not only such pieces as came under our review; but many others, even unfinish'd. Swift.

UNFIRM. adj.

1. Weak; feeble.

Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm
Than women's arcs. Shakspeare.

So is the unfirm king
In three divided; and his coffers found
With hollow poverty and emptiness. Shakspeare.

2. Not stable.

Take the time, while stagg'ring yet they stand,
With feet unfirm, and prepossess the strand. Dryden.

UNFIT. adj.

1. Improper; unsuitable.

They easily perceive how unfit that were for the present, which was for the first age convenient enough. Hooker.

Neither can I think you would impose upon me an unfit and over-ponderous argument. Milton.

2. Unqualified.

Unfit he was for any worldly thing,
And eke unable once to sit or go. Spenser.

Old as I am, for ladies' love unfit,
The pow'r of beauty I remember yet. Dryden.

A genius that can hardly take in the connection of three propositions, is utterly unfit for speculative studies. Watts.

To UNFIT. v. a. To disqualify.

Those excellencies, as they qualified him for dominion, so they unfitted him for a satisfaction or acquiescence in his vassals. Gov. of the Tongue.

UNFITLY. adv. Not properly; not suitably.

Others, reading to the church those books which the apostles wrote, are neither untruly nor unfitly said to preach. Hooker.

The kingdom of France may be not unfitly compared to a body that hath all its blood drawn up into the arms, breast and back. Howell.

UNFITNESS. n. f.

1. Want of qualifications.

In setting down the form of common prayer,
there was no need that the book should mention either the learning of a fit, or the unfitness of an ignorant minister. Hooker.

It is looked upon as a great weakness, and unfitness for business, for a man to be so open, as really to think not only what he says, but what he hears. South.

2. Want of propriety.

UNFITTING. adj. Not proper.

Although monosyllables, for use in our tongue, are unfitting for verses, yet are they the most fit for expressing briefly the first conceits of the mind. Camden.

To UNFIX. v. a.

1. To loosen; to make less fast.

Ploeking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfix so and shake a friend. Shakspeare.

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakspeare.

2. To make fluid.

Stuff with eternal ice, and hid in snow,
The mountain stands: nor can the rising sun
Unfix her frosts, and teach them how to run. Dryden.

UNFIXED. adj.

1. Wandering; erratick; inconstant; vagrant.

So vast the noise, as if not fleets did join,
But lands unfix'd, and floating nations strove. Dryden.
Her lovely looks a sprightly mind disclose,
Quick as her eyes, and as unfix'd as those. Pope.

2. Not determined.

Irrolute on which the should rely:
At last unfix'd in all, is only fix'd to die. Dryden.

UNFLEDGED. adj. That has not yet the full furniture of feathers; young; not completed by time; not having attained full growth.

The friends thou hast, and their adaption try'd, Grapple them to thy soul with hook or sledge!
But do not dull thy palm with entertainment
Of each new-hatch'd unfledg'd comrade. Shakspeare.

In those unfledg'd days was my wife a girl.
Shakspeare.

Unfledg'd actors learn to laugh and cry. Dryden.

UNFLESHED. adj. Not fleshed; not seasoned to blood; raw.

Nature his limbs only for war made fit;
With some less foe thy unflesh'd valour try. Couley.
As a generous, unflesh'd hound, that hears
From far the hunter's horn and cheerful cry,
So will I haile. Dryden.

UNFOLDED. adj. Unsubdued; not put to the worst.

The utmost powers thought themselves secure in the strength of an unfolding army of sixty thousand men, and in a revenue proportionable. Temple.

To UNFOLD. v. a.

1. To expand; to spread; to open.

I saw on him rising
Out of the water, heav'n above the cloud,
Unfold her crystal doors; thence on his head
A perfect dove descend. Milton.
Invade his hissing throat, and winding fires,
'Till stretch'd in length th' unfolding toe retires. Dryden.

Ah, what avail—

The vivid green his shining plumes unfolds? Pope.
Sloth unfolds her arms, and wakes;
Lift'ning Envy drops her snakes. Pope.

2. To tell; to declare.

What tidings with our cousin Buckingham?
—Such as my heart doth tremble to unfold. Shakspeare.
Unfold to me why you are heavy. Shakspeare.

Surprise her with discourse of my dear faith. Shakspeare.

Helen, to you our minds we will unfold. Shakspeare.

Ship and men unfold
That to this ill convey you. Chapman.
How comes it thus? Unfold, celestial guide! Milton.

Things of deep sense we may in prose unfold;
But they move more in lofty numbers told. Waller.

3. To discover; to reveal.

Time shall unfold what plaited cunning hides:
Who covers faults, at last with shame derides. Shakspeare.

If the object be seen through two or more such convex or concave glasses, every glass shall make a new image, and the object shall appear in the place, and of the bigness of the last image; which consideration unfolds the theory of microscopes and telescopes. Newton.

4. To display; to set to view.

We are the inhabitants of the earth, and endowed with understanding: doth it then properly belong to us, to examine and unf the works of God? Burnet.

5. To release or dismiss from a fold.
The unfolding star calls up the shepherd. Shakspeare.

To UNFOOL. v. a. To restore from folly.
Have you any way to unfool me again? Shakspeare.

UNFORBID. } adj. Not prohibited.
UNFORBIDDEN. }

If unforbid thou may'st *un*fold
What we, not to explore the secrets, ask
Of his eternal empire. Milton.

These are the unforbidden trees: and here we may let loose the reins, and indulge our thoughts. Milton.

A good man not only forbears those gratifications which are forbidden by reason and religion, but even restrains himself in unforbidden instances. Atterbury.

UNFORBIDDENNESS. n. f. The state of being unforbidden.

The heaviest you are so severe to, is no where especially prohibited in scripture; and this unfo-rbiddenness they think sufficient to evince, that the sumptuousness you condemn is not in its own nature sinful. Bayle.

UNFORCED. adj.

1. Not compelled; not constrained.

This gentle and unforc'd accord of Hamlet Sits smiling to my heart. Shakspeare.
Unforc'd by punishment, unaw'd by fear,
His words were simple, and his soul sincere. Dryden.

2. Not impelled; not externally urged.

No more can impure man retain and move
In that pure region of a worthy love,
Than earthly substance can, unforc'd, aspire,
And leave his nature, to converse with fire. Dryden.

3. Not feigned; not artificially heightened.

Upon these tidings they broke forth into such unforced and unfeigned passions, as it plainly appeared that good-nature did work in them. Hayward.

4. Not violent; easy; gradual.

Wind for the next above the valley swells
Into my eye, and doth itself present
With such an easy and unforc'd ascent,
That no stupendous precipice denies Access, no horror turns away our eyes. Denham.

5. Not contrary to ease.

If one arm is stretched out, the body must be somewhat bowed on the opposite side, in a situation which is unforced. Dryden.

UNFORCIBLE. adj. Wanting strength.

The same reason which causeth to yield that they are of some force in the one, will constrain to acknowledge that they are not in the other although unforcible. Hooker.

UNFOREBOD'ING. adj. Giving no omens.

Unnumber'd birds glide through th' aerial way,

UNFORTUNATE. adj. Not successful; unprosperous; wanting luck; unhappy.
It is used both of a train of events, as an unfortunate life; or of a single event, as, an unfortunate expedition; or of persons, as, an unfortunate man, an unfortunate commander.

All things religiously taken in hand, are prosperously ended; because whether men in the end have that which religion did allow to desire, or that which it teacheth them contentedly to suffer, they are in neither event unfortunate.

Whoever will live altogether out of himself, and study other men's humours, shall never be unfortunate.

Vindictive persons live the life of witches, who, as they are mischievous, end unfortunate.

He that would hunt a hare with an elephant, is not unfortunate for missing the mark, but foolish for choosing such an unapt instrument.

The virgin shall on tedious days
Visit his tomb with flowers, only bewailing
His lot unfortunate in nuptial choice,
From whence captivity and loss of eyes.

UNFORTUNATELY. adv. Unhappily; without good luck.
Unconsulting affection unfortunately born to me-wards, made Zelmune borrow so much of her natural modesty, as to leave her more decent raiment.

Most of these artists unfortunately miscarried,
by falling down and breaking their arms.

She kept her countenance when the lid, remov'd,
Disclos'd the heart unfortunately lov'd.

UNFORTUNATELY. n. f. [from unfortunate.] Ill luck.
Ome, the only subject of the destinies displeasure, whose greatest fortunateness is more unfortunate than my sister's greatest unfortunateness.

UNFOUGHT. adj. Not fought.
They used such diligence in taking the passages, that it was not possible they should escape unfought.

UNINTELLIGENT. adj. Not knowing; not skillful; not having any consciousness.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses may be unintelligent of our insuflience. Shakspeare.
The visible creation is far otherwise apprehended by the philosophical enquirer, than the unintelligent vulgar. Glanville.

This conclusion if men allowed of, they would not destroy ill-formed productions. Ay, but these monsters. Let them be so; what will your drivelling, unintelligent, untractable changeling be? Locke.

Why then to works of nature is assign'd
An author unintelligent and blind;
When ours proceed from choice? Blackmore.
The obvious products of unintelligent nature. Bentley.

UNINTELLIGIBILITY. n. s. Quality of not being intelligible.

Credit the unintelligibility of this union and motion. Glanville.

If we have truly proved the unintelligibility of it in all other ways, this argumentation is undeniable. Burnet.

UNINTELLIGIBLE. adj. [unintelligible, French.] Not such as can be understood.

The Latin, three hundred years before Tully, was as unintelligible in his time, as the English and French of the same period are now. Saut.
Did Thetis

These arms thus labour'd for her son prepare;
For that dull soul to stare with stupid eyes,
On the learn'd unintelligible prize! Dryden.
This notion must be despised as harmless, unintelligible enthusiasm. Rogers.

UNINTELLIGIBLY. adv. In a manner not to be understood.

Sound is not unintelligibly explained by a vibrating motion communicated to the medium. Locke.
To talk of specific differences in nature, without reference to general ideas, is to talk unintelligibly. Locke.

UNINTENTIONAL. adj. Not designed; happening without design.

Besides the unintentional deficiencies of my style, I have purposely transgressed the laws of oratory, in making my periods overlong. Boyle.

UNINTERESTED. adj. Not having interest.

The greatest part of an audience is always uninterested, though seldom knowing. Dryden.

UNINTERMITTED. adj. Continued; not interrupted.

This motion of the heavenly bodies seems to be partly continued and unintermitted, as that motion of the first moveable partly interpolated and interrupted. Hale.

UNINTERMIXED. adj. Not mingled.
Unmingled with delusive fantasies,
I bring the truth, not poetry. Deane.

UNINTERRUPTED. adj. Not broken; not interrupted.

My constant quiet fits my peaceful brook
With constant joy, uninterrupted rest. Robinson.
Glosses are so divided among themselves in matters of religion, that no one of them is far in the right of another. Addison.

The little eye infinitely, and leave the eye a vast, uninterrupted patch. Addison.

The unintermitted skin in superficial wounds is rejected. Sharp.

UNINTERRUPTEDLY. adv. Without interruption.

A successive organization unintermitted continued in an actual existence of thinking, and conceptions in all ages unto the end of the world. Ray.

The will thus determined, never lets the understanding lay by the object; but all the thoughts of the mind, and powers of the body, are uninterruptedly employed. Locke.

UNINTRENCHED. adj. Not intrenched.

It had been cowardice in the Trojans, not to have attempted any thing against an army that lay unfortified and unentrenched. Pope.

UNINVESTIGABLE. adj. Not to be searched out.

The number of the works of this visible world being uninvestigable by us, afford us a demonstrative proof of the unlimited extent of the Creator's skill. Ray.

UNINVI'TED. adj. Not asked.
His honest friends, at thirty hour of dusk,
Come uninvited. Phillips.

UNJOINTED. adj.

1. Disjointed; separated.

I hear the sound of words; their sense the air
Dissolves unjointed ere it reach my ear. Milton.

2. Having no articulation.

They are all three immovable or unjointed, of the thickness of a little pin. Grew.

UNION. n. s. [unio, Latin.]

1. The act of joining two or more, so as to make them one.

Adam, from whose dear side I boast me sprung,
And glad of our union hear thee speak,
One heart, one soul, in both! Milton.
One kingdom, joy, and union without end. Milton.

2. Concord; conjunction of mind or interests.

The experience of those profitable emanations from God, most commonly are the first motive of our love; but when we once have tasted his goodness, we love the spring for its own excellency, passing from considering ourselves, to an union with God. Taylor.

3. A pearl. Not in use.

The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath;
And in the cup an union shall be throw,
Richer than that which four successive kings
In Denmark's crown have worn. Shakspeare.

4. In law.

Union is a combining or consolidation of two churches in one, which is done by the consent of the bishop, the patron, and incumbent. And this is properly called an union: but there are two other sorts, as when one church is made subject to the other, and when one man is made prelate of both, and when a conventual is made cathedral. Touching union in the first signification, there was a statute, an. 37 Hen. VIII. chap. 21. that it should be lawful in two churches, whereof the value of the one is not above six pounds in the king's books, of the first fruits, and not above one mile distant from the other. Union in this signification is personal, and that is for the life of the incumbent; or real, that is, perpetual, whosoever is incumbent. Cowell.

UNI'PAROUS. adj. [unus and pario.] Bringing one at a birth.

Others make good the paucity of their breed with the duration of their days, whereof there want not examples in animals uniparous. Brown.

UNISON. adj. [unus and sonus, Latin.] Sounding along.

Sounds unison'd with voice Choral, or unison. Milton.

UNISON. n. s.

1. A string that has the same sound with another.

When moved matter meets with any thing like that from which it received its primary impress, it will in like manner move it, as in musical strings tuned unison. Glanville.

2. A single unvaried note.

Let was the nation's tone, not could be found,
While a long, solemn unison went round. Pope.

Disjointed, and without union of atoms.
From their side, yet unconnected with atoms. Newton.

UNIT. n. s. [unus, unitus, Latin.] One; the least number; or the root of numbers.

If any atom should be moved mechanically, without attraction, 'tis above a hundred million millions odds to an unit, that it would not strike upon any other atom, but glide through an empty interval without contact. Bentley.

Units are the integral parts of any large number. Watts.

To UNITÉ. v. a. [unitus, Latin.]

1. To join two or more into one.

The force which went in two to be dispersed, in one alone right hand he now unites. Spenser.
Whatever truths

Redeem'd from error, or from ignorance,
Thine in their authors, like rich veins of ore,
Your works unite, and still discover more. Dryden.

A proposition for uniting both kingdoms was here. Swift.

2. To make to agree.

The king proposed nothing more than to unite his kingdom in one form of worship. Clarendon.

3. To make to adhere.

The pectorum, which is a dry body, may be united with the muscular flesh. Weyman.

4. To join.

In the lawful name of marrying,
To give our hearts united ceremony. Shakspeare.

And force them with a constancy, the cardinal
Cannot stand under them. Shakspeare.

2. To coalesce; to be cemented; to be consolidated.

3. To grow into one.

UNITEDLY. adv. With union; so as to join.

The eyes, which are of a watry nature, ought to be much painted, and unitedly on their lower parts; but boldly touched above by the light and shadow. Dryden.

UNITER. n. s. The person or thing that unites.

Suppose an uniter of a middle constitution, that should partake of some of the qualities of both. Glanville.

UNITION. n. s. [union, French; from unite.] The act or power of uniting; conjunction; coalition. A word proper, but little used.

As long as any different substance keeps off the union, hope not to cure a wound. Wytman.

UNITIVE. adj. [from unite.] Having the power of uniting.

That can be nothing else but the unitive way of religion, which consists of the contemplation and love of God. Norris.

UNITY. n. s. [unitas, Latin.]

1. The state of being one.

Those heretics introduced a plurality of gods; and so made the profession of the unity part of the symbolism, that should discriminate the orthodox from them. Hammond.

The production of one being the destruction of another, although they generate, they increase not, and must not be said to multiply, who do not transcend an unity. Brown.

Man is to bring
Like of his like; his knaps multiply'd:
In unity defective; which requires Collected love, and depend unity. Milton.

Whether we can consider it as one thing, depends on the understanding the term of unity. Locke.

9. Concord; conjunction.

That which you hear, you'll swear
You see, there is such unity in the proofs. Shakspeare.
Nor can we call those many, who endeavour to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace.
By this, said our Saviour, shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love unto another;
and this is the unity of charity. Peterson.

Take unity then out of the world, and it dissolves into a chaos. Holyday.

We, of all christians, ought to promote unity among ourselves and others. Spratt.

3. Agreement; uniformity.

To the avoiding of dissension, it availeth much, that there be amongst them an unity, as well in ceremonies as in doctrine. Hooker.

4. Principle of dramatick writing, by which the tenour of the story, and propriety of representation, is preserved.

The unities of time, place, and action, are exactly observed. Dryden.

Although in poetry it be absolutely necessary that the unities of time, place, and action should be thoroughly understood, there is still something more essential, that elevates and astonishes the fancy. Addison.

5. In law.

Unity of possession is a joint possession of two rights by several titles. For example, I take a lease of land from one upon a certain rent; afterwards I buy the fee-simple. This is an unity of possession, whereby the lease is extinguished; by reason that I, who had before the occupation only for my rent, am become lord of the same, and am to pay no rent to none. Cowell.

UNJUST. adj. Not judicially determined.

Castes unjust'd disgrace the loaded file,
And sleeping laws the king's neglect revile. Prior.
UNIVERSAL. adj. [universalis, Latin.]

1. General; extending to all.

All forrowed: if all the world could have seen 't,
the woe had been universal. Shakspeare.

Appetite, an universal wolf,
So doubly seconded with will and power,
Must make perforce an universal prey,
And last eat up itself. Shakspeare.

Divine laws and precepts simply and formally moral, are universal, in respect of persons, and in regard of their perpetual obligation. White.

This excellent epistle, though, in the front of it,
it bears a particular inscription, yet in the drift of it is universal, as designing to convince all mankind of the necessity of seeking for happiness in the gospel. South.

No subject can be of universal, hardly can it be of general concern. Reynolds.

2. Total; whole.

From harmony, from heav'nly harmony,
This universal frame began. Dryden.

3. Not particular; comprising all particu- lars.

From things particular the death abstract the universal kinds. Davies.

An universal was the object of imagination, and there was no such thing in reality. Arbut. and Pope.

UNIVERSAL. n. s. The whole; the general system of the universe. Not in use.

To what end had the angel been sent to keep the entrance into paradise after Adam's expulsion, if the universal had been paradise? Raleigh.

Plato call'd God the cause and original, the nature and reason of the universal. Raleigh.

UNIVERSALITY. n. s. [universality, school Latin.] Not particularity; generality; extension to the whole.

This catholicity, or second affection of the church, consisteth generally in universality, as embracing all sorts of persons, as to be disseminated through all nations, as comprehending all ages, as containing all necessary and saving truths, as obliging all conditions of men to all kind of obedience, as curing all diseases, and planting all graces in the souls of men. Pearson.

This dialogue of his is but of an under a limitation; an universality of sin under a certain kind;
that is, of all sin of direct and personal commission. South.

The universality of the deluge I insist upon; and that marine bodies are found in all parts of the world. Woodward.

A special emulsion cannot be inferred from a moral universality, nor always from a physical one;
though it may be always inferred from an universality that is metaphysical. Watts.

He might have seen it in an instance or two; and he mistook accident for universality. Reynolds.

UNIVERSALLY. adv. [from universus.]

Throughout the whole; without exception.

Those offences which are breaches of supernatural laws, violate in general that principle of reason, which willeth universally to fly from evil. Hook.

There best beheld, where universally admir'd.
Milton.

What he borrows from the antients, he repays with usury of his own, in coin as good, and as universally valuable. Dryden.

This institution of charity-schools universally prevailed. Addison.

UNIVERSE. n. s. [univers, Fr. universum, Lat.] The general system of things.

Creeping murmur, and the poring dark,
Fills the wide vessel of the universe. Shakspeare.

God here sums up all into man; the whole into a part; the universe into an individual. South.

Father of heav'n!

Whose word call'd out this universe to birth. Prior.

UNIVERSITY. n. s. [universitas, Lat.] A school, where all the arts and faculties are taught and studied.

While I play the good husband at home, my son and servants spend all at the university. Shakspeare.

In the treatises also of place between ecclesiastical dignities, or degrees of the universities, such reasons and authorities are commonly used as may be applied likewise to temporal dignities. Selden.

The universities, especially Aberdeen, flourish'd under many excellent scholars, and very learned men. Clarendon.

UNIVOCAL. adj. [univocus, Latin.]

1. Having one meaning.

Univocal words are such as signify but one idea, or but one sort of thing: equivocal words are such as signify two or more different ideas, or different sorts of objects. Watts.

2. Certain; regular; pursuing always one tenour.

This conceit makes putrefactive generations correspondent unto seminal productions; and conceives univocal effects, and univocal conformity unto the efficient. Brown.

UNIVOCALLY. adv. [from univocal.]

1. In one term; in one sense.

How is sin univocally distinguished into venial and mortal, if the venial be not sin? Hall.

It were too great presumption to think, that there is any thing in any created nature, that can bear any perfect resemblance of the incomprehensible perfection of the divine nature; very being itself does not predicate univocally touching God, and any created being, and intellect, and will, as we attribute them to him. Hale.

2. In one tenour.

All creatures are generated univocally by parents of their own kind; there is no such thing as spontaneous generation. Roy.

UNJOYOUS. adj. Not gay; not cheerful.

Morn, late rising o'er the drooping world,
Lifts her pale eye unjoyous. Thomson.

UNJUST. adj. [injuste, Fr. injustus, Lat.]

Iniquitous; contrary to equity; contrary to justice. It is used both of persons and things.

I should forgo
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,
Defending them for weak. Shakspeare.

The Flaccian.

Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne. Shakl.

He that is unjust in the least, is unjust all in much. Hooker.

Successing kings' just recovery of their right from unjust usurpations and encroachments, shall never be prejudiced by any act of mine. King Charles.

Th' unjust the just hath slain. Milton.

He who was so unjust as to do his brother an injury, will scarce be so just to condemn himself for it. Locke.

UNJUSTIFIABLE. adj. Not to be co- fended; not to be justified.

If their reproaches, which aim only at adoma-tion of wit, be to unjustifiable, what shall we say to those that are drawn, that are founded in malice? Government of the Tongue.

If we could look into effects, we might pronounce boldly: but for a man to give his opinion of what he sees but in part, is an unjustifiable piece of rationals. Addison.

In a just and honourable war we engaged; not out of ambition, or any other unjustifiable motive, but for the defence of all that was dear to us. Atterbury.

UNJUSTIFIABLENESS. n. s. The quality of not being justifiable.

He wished them to consider of the illegality of all those commissions, and of the unjustifiableness of all the proceedings which had been by virtue of them. Clarendon.

When it is unlawful upon the unjustifiableness of the ground, we sin in it till we put an end to it. Kittlewell.

UNJUSTIFIABLY. adv. In a manner not to be defended.

UNJUSTLY. adv. In a manner contrary to right.

If might against my life
Thy country fought of thee, it fought unjustly. Milton.

Whom, but for voting peace, the Greeks pursue,
Accus'd unjustly, then unjustly flew. Denham.

Your choler does unjustly rise,
To see your friends pursue your enemies. Dryden.

Moderation the one side very justly disowns,
and the other as unjustly pretends to. Swift.

UNKENNET. adj. Not combed, Obsolete.

Thenot, to that I chose thou dost me tempt;
But ah! too well I wot my humble vines,
And how my rhymes been rugged and unkempt. Spenser.

To UNKENNEL. v. a.

1. To drive from his hole.

Search, seek, find out. I warrant we'll unkennel the fox. Let me stop this way first. So, now uncape. Shakspeare.

I warrant you, colonel, we'll unkenel him. Dryden.

2. To rouse from its secrecy or retreat.

It his occult guilt
Do not itself unkenel in one speech,
It is a damned ghost that we have seen. Shakspeare.

UNKENT. adj. [unk and ken, to know.]

Unknown. Obsolete.

Go, little book, thyself present;
As child whose parent is unkent.

To him, that is the president
Of nobleness and chivalrie. Spenser.

UNKET. adj.

1. Not kept; not retained.

2. Unobserved; unobeyed.

Many things kept generally heretofore, are now in like sort generally unkett, and unobserved, every where. Hooker.

UNKIND. adj. Not favourable; not be- nevolent.

In nature there's no blemish but the mind;
None can be call'd deform'd, but the unkind. Shakspeare.

To the noble mind
Rich gifts wax poor; when givers prove unkind.

To Nimrod our author seems a little unkind; and says, that he against right enlarged his empire. Locke.

A real joy I never knew,
Till I believ'd thy passion true;

A real grief I he'er can find,
Till thou prov'st perjur'd or unkind. Prior.

Or, if they form you, forte you did not mind.
And, in their height of kindness, are unkind. Young.

UNKINDLY, adv. [see unkind.]

1. Unnatural; contrary to nature.
They, with their steadiness,
Polluted this fane gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And 'gan abhor her blood's unkindly crime.
All were they born of her own native slime. Spenser.
2. Malignant; unfavourable.
The goddess, that in rural shrine
Dwell'd here with Pan, or Sylvan, by blest song Forbidding every bleak, unkindly fog
To touch the prosperous growth of this tall wood. Milton.

UNKINDLY, adv.

1. Without kindness; without affection.
The herd, unkindly wife,
Or chaces him from thence, or from him flies. Denham.
If we unkindly part,
Will not the poor fond creature break her heart? Dryden.
2. Contrarily to nature.
All works of nature,
Abortive, monstrous, or unkindly mix'd. Milton.

UNKINDNESS, n. f. [from unkind.] Malignity; ill-will; want of affection.
Take no unkindness of his hasty words. Shaksp.
His unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quenched her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Shaksp.

After their return, the duke executed the same authority in conferring all favours, and in revenging himself upon those who had manifested any unkindness towards him. Clarendon.
Ever—as one who loves, and some unkindness
meets.

With sweet, austere composure, thus reply'd. Milt.
Christ, who wastest the only person to have refuted
this unkindness, finds an extenuation of it. South.
She sigh'd, she wept, she low'd; 'twas all the con'd;
And with unkindness seem'd to vex the god. Dryden.

TO UNKING, v. a. 'To deprive of royalty.
God save king Henry, waking'd Richard says,
And send him many years of sunshine days! Shak.
It takes the force of law: how then, my lord!
If as they would unking my father now,
To make you way. Southern.

UNKISS'D, adj. Not kissed.
Foul words are but foul wind, and foul wind is but foul breath, and foul breath is noxious; therefore I will depart unkind. Shaksp.

UNKLE, n. f. [uncle, Fr.] The brother of one's father or mother. See UNCLE.
The English power is near, led on by Malcolm,
His unkle Siward, and the good Macduff. Shaksp.
Give me good fame, ye pow'r'd and make me just:
Thus much the rogue o' public ears will trust:
To private then:—When wilt thou, mighty Jove!
My wealthy unkle from this world remove? Dryden.

UNKIGHTLY, adj. Unbecoming a knight.
With six hours hard riding through wild places,
I overgot them a little before night, near an old ill-favoured castle, the place where I perceived they went to perform their unknighly errand. Sidney.

TO UNKNIT, v. a.
1. To unweave; to separate.
Would he had continued to his country
As he began, and not unknit himself
The noble knot he made! Shaksp.

2. To open.
Unknit that threat'ning, unkind brow,
And dart not scornful glances from those eyes. Shak.

TO UNKNOW, v. a. To cease to know.
It's already known:
Oh! can you keep it from yourselves, unknice it? Smith.

UNKNOWABLE, adj. Not to be known.
Distinguish well between knowables and unknowables. Watts.

UNKNOWING, adj.

1. Ignorant; not knowing: with of.

Let us speak to the yet unknown world:
How these things came about. Shaksp.
Though unknice persons may accuse others,
yet can they never the more absolve themselves.

Decay of Piety.
Unknowing I prepar'd thy bridal bed;
With empty hopes of happy issue fed. Dryden.

Unknowing he requires it; and when known,
He thinks it his; and values it, 'tis gone. Dryden.
His hounds, unknowing of his change, pursue
The chace, and their mistaken master slew. Dryd.

Proteus, mounting from the hoary deep,
Surveys his charge, unknowing of deceit. Pope.

2. Not practised; not qualified.
So Lybian huntswen, on some sandy plain,
From study covert rout'd, the lion chace:
The kingly beast roars out with loud disdain,
And slowly moves, unknowing to give place. Dryden.

These were they, whose souls the furies steel'd,
And curs'd with hearts unknowing how to yield. Pope.

UNKNOWINGLY, adv. Ignorantly; without knowledge.
The beauty I behold has struck me dead:
Unknowingly she strikes, and kills by chance. Dryden.

They are like the Syrians, who were first smitten with blindness, and unknowingly led out of their way, into the capital of their enemy's country. Addison.

UNKNOW'N, adj.

1. Not known.
'Tis not unknown to you,
How much I have dishab'd my estate. Shaksp.
Many are the trees of God, that grow
In Paradise, and various, yet unknown
To us. Milton.

Here may I always on this downy grass,
Unknown, unseen, my easy minutes pass! Roscom.

If any chance has hitherto brought the name
Of Palar-dea, not unknown to fame,
Accus'd and sentenc'd for pretended crimes. Dryd.

Though incest is indeed a deadly crime,
You are not guilty, since unknown 'twas done,
And, known, had been abhor'd. Dryden.

At fear of death, that saddens all
With terrors round, can reason hold her throne;
Despise the known, nor tremble at th' unknown? Pope.

2. Greater than is imagined.
The planting of hemp and flax would be an unknown advantage to the kingdom. Bacon.

3. Not having cohabitation.
I am yet
Unknown to woman; never was forsworn. Shaksp.

4. Not having communication.
At a little inn, the man of the house, formerly a servant in the family, to do honour to his old master, had, unknown to sir Roger, put him up in a sign-post. Addison.

UNLABOURED, adj.

1. Not produced by labour.
Unlaboured harvests shall the fields adorn,
And cluster'd grapes shall blush on every thorn. Dryden.

2. Not cultivated by labour.
Not eastern monarchs, on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple shine so gay,
As the bright natives of th' unlaboured field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unskill'd. Blackmore.

3. Spontaneous; voluntary.
Their charms, if charms they have, the truth supplies,
And from the thorns unlaboured beauties rise. Tickel.

TO UNLACE, v. a.

1. To loose any thing fastened with strings.
He could not endure so cruel case,
But thought his arms to leave, and helmet to un-lace. Spenser.

A little river roll'd,
By which there sat a knight with helm unlac'd,
Himself refreshing with the liquid cold. Spenser.

The helmet from my brow unlac'd. Pope.

2. To loose a woman's dress.

Can I loose, when they in prison place him,
With twining arms, in love, and due disengagement,
She lay for dead, till I help'd with unlacing her? Sidney.

Unlace yourself, for that haggardous chime
Tells me from you, that now it is bed-time. Donne.

3. To divest of ornaments.
You unlace your reputation,
And spend your rich opinion for the name
Of a night-brawler. Shaksp.

TO UNLACE, v. a.

1. To remove from the vessel which carries.
He's a foolish seaman,
That, when his ship is sinking, will not Unlace his hopes into another bottom. Denham.

2. To exonerate that which carries.
The vent'rous merchant, who design'd for far,
And touches on our hospitable shore,
Charm'd with the splendour of this northern star,
Shall here unlade him, and depart no more. Dryd.

3. To put out. Used of a vessel.
We laded at Tyre; for there the ship was to unlade her burden. Act.

UNLAD'D, adj.

1. Not placed; not fixed.
Whatsoever we do behold now in this present world, it was inwrapped within the bowels of divine mercy, written in the book of eternal wisdom, and held in the hands of omnipotent power, the first foundations of the world being as yet unlaid. Hooker.

2. Not pacified; not stilled; not suppressed.
No evil thing that walks by night,
Bine, meagre hag, or stubborn unlaid ghost,
Hath hurtful pow'r o'er true virginity. Milton.

UNLAMENTED, adj. Not deplored.
After six years spent in outward opulency, and inward murmur that it was not greater, he died unlamented by any. Clarendon.

Thus unlamented pass the proud away,
The pride of fools, and pageant of a day. Pope.

TO UNLATCH, v. a. To open by lifting up the latch.
My worthy wife
The door unlatch'd; and, with repeated calls, Invites her former lord within my walls. Dryden.

UNLAWFUL, adj. Contrary to law; not permitted by the law.
Before I be convict by course of law,
To threaten me with death is most unlawful. Shaksp.

It is an unlawful thing for a Jew to cure with one of another nation. Act.

Shew me when it is our duty, and when unlawful, to take these courses, by some general rule of a perpetual, never-failing truth. South.

The secret ceremonies I conceal,
Uncouth, perhaps unlawful to reveal. Dryden.

UNLAWFULLY, adv.

1. In a manner contrary to law or right.
He that gains all that he can lawfully this year,
next year will be tempted to gain something unlawfully. Taylor.

2. Illegitimately; not by marriage.
I had rather my brother die by the law, than my son should be unlawfully born. Shaksp.

Give me your opinion, what part I, being unlawfully born, may claim of the man's affection who begot me. Addison.

UNLAWFULNESS, n. f.

1. Contrariety to law; state of being not permitted.
If those alleged testimonies of scripture did indeed concern the matter to such effect as was pretended, that which they should infer were unlawful. Hooker.

The original reason of the unlawfulness of lying is, that it carries with it an act of injustice, and a violation of the right of him to whom we were obliged to signify our minds. South.

2. Illegitimacy.

TO UNLARN, v. a. To forget, or disuse, what has been learned.

...being asked of one, what learning was necessary for that? answered, To understand what's in a book.
This were to imply, that all books in being should be destroyed; and that all the age should take new pains to unlearn those habits which have cost them so much labour.
The government of the tongue is a piece of morality which febes nature dictates, which yet our greatest scholars have unlearned. Decay of Poetry.
Some cyders have by art, or age, unlearn'd
Their genuine relish, and off dandy wines
Adam'd the flavour.
What they thus learned from him in one way,
they did not unlearn again in another. Atterbury.
A wicked man is not only obliged to learn to do well, but unlearn his former lile. Rogers.
UNLEARNED. adj.
1. Ignorant; not informed; not instructed.
This selected piece, which you translate,
Foretells your studies may communicate,
From darker dialect of a strange land,
Wisdom that here th' unlearn'd shall understand.
Davenant.
And by succession of unlearned times,
As bards began, so monks rung on the chimes.
Roscommon.
Some at the bar with subtilty defend
The cause of an unlearned, noble friend.
Though unlearned men well enough understood
The words white and black, yet there were philosophers found who had subtilty enough to prove that white was black. Locke.
2. Not gained by study; not known.
They learn mere words, or such things chiefly as were better unlearned. Milton.
3. Not suitable to a learned man.
I will prove those verses to be very unlearned,
neither favouring of poetry, wit, or invention.
Shakespeare.
UNLEARNEDLY. adv. Ignorantly; grossly.
He, in his epistle, plainly affirmeth, they think unlearnedly who are of another belief. Brown.
UNLEAVENED. adj. Not fermented; not mixed with fermenting matter.
They baked unleavened cakes of the dough, for it was not leavened. Exodus.
UNLEISUREDNESS. n. f. Business; want of time; want of leisure. Not in use.
My essay touching the scripture having been written partly in England, partly in another kingdom, it were strange if there did not appear much unevenness, and if it did not betray the unlesureness of the wandering author. Boyle.
UNLESS, conjunct. Except; if not; supposing that not.
Let us not say, we keep the commandments of the one, when we break the commandments of the other: for unless we observe both, we obey neither. Hooker.
Unless I look on Sylvia in the day,
There is no day for me to look upon.
What hidden strength,
Unless the strength of heav'n, if you mean that?
Milton.
For sure I am, unless I win in arms,
To stand excluded from Emilia's charms;
Nor can my strength avail, unless by thee
Eadu'd with force I gain the victory. Dryden.
The commendation of adversaries is the greatest triumph of a writer, because it never comes unless extorted. Dryden.
No poet ever sweetly sang
Unless he were, like Phœbus, young;
Nor ever nymph inspir'd to rhyme,
Unless, like Venus, in her prime. Swift.
UNLESSONED. adj. Not taught.
The full lam of me
Is an un-fan'd girl, unschoo'd, unpractis'd;
Happy in this, she is not yet so old
But she may learn. Shakespeare.
UNLETTERED. adj. Unlearned; untaught.
When the apostles of our lord were detained to alter the laws of heathenish religion, St. Paul exposed, the end were unlearned and unlettered

men.
Such as the jocund flute, or gamestome pipe
Sits up among the loose, unletter'd hords,
Who thank the gods amiss. Milton.
Th' unletter'd christian, who believes in gods,
Plods on to heav'n, and ne'er is at a loss. Dryden.
UNL'VELLED. adj. Not laid even.
All unwell'd the gay garden lies. Tickel.
UNLIB'DINOUS. adj. Not lustful; pure from carnality.
In those hearts
Love unlibidinous reign'd; nor jealousy
Was understood, the injur'd lover's hell. Milton.
UNLICENCED. adj. Having no regular permission.
Ask what boldness brought him hither Unlicens'd. Milton.
Warn the thoughtless, self-confiding train,
No more, unlicens'd, thus to brave the main. Pope.
UNLICKED. adj. Shapeless; not formed:
from the opinion that the bear licks her young to shape.
Shape my legs of an unequal size,
To disproportion me in every part,
Like to a chaos, or unlick'd bear-whelp. Shaksp.
The e unlick'd bear-whelp. Donne.
The bloody bear, as independent beast,
Unlick'd to form, in ground her hate express. Dryden.
UNLIGHTED. adj. Not kindled; not set on fire.
There lay a log unlighted on the earth;
For th' unborn chief the fatal sisters came,
And rais'd it up, and tof'd it on the flame. Dryden.
The sacred wood, which on the altar lay, Untouch'd, unlighted glows. Prior.
UNLIGHTSOME. adj. Dark; gloomy; wanting light.
First the sun,
A mighty sphere! he fraud, unlightsome first,
Thought of æthereal mould. Milton.
UNLIKE. adj.
1. Dissimilar; having no resemblance.
Where cases are so unlike as theirs and ours, I see not how that which they did should induce, much less inforce us to the same practice. Hooker.
So the twins' humours, in our Terence, are Unlike; this harsh and rude, that smooth and fair.
Denham.
Unlike the niceness of our modern dames,
Affected nymphs, with new affected names. Dryd.
Our ideas, whilst we are awake, force'd one another not much unlike the images in the inside of a lighthouse. Locke.
Some the disgrac'd, and some with honours
crown'd;
Unlike successes equal merits found. Pope.
2. Improbable; unlikely; not likely.
Make not impossible that which but seems unlike.
Shakespeare.
What beset the empire of Almague were not unlike to beset to Spain, if it should break. Bacon.
UNLIKELIHOOD. n. f. [from unlikely.]
UNLIKELINESS. } Improbability.
The work was carried on, amidst all the unlikelihoods and discouraging circumstances imaginable;
the builders holding the sword in one hand, to defend the trowel working with the other. South.
There are degrees herein, from the very neighbourhood of demonstration, quite down to improbability and unlikeliness, even to the confines of impossibility. Locke.
UNLIKELY. adj.
1. Improbable; not such as can be reasonably expected.
A very unlikely envy she hath stumbled upon.
Sidney.
2. Not promising any particular event.
Effects are miraculous and strange, when they grow by unlikely means. Hooker.
My advice and actions both have met Success in things unlikely. Denham.
This collection we thought not only unlikely to reach the future, but unworthy of the posthumous age.

UNLIKELY. adv. Improbably.
The pleasures we are to enjoy in that conversation, not unlikely may proceed from the discoveries each shall communicate to another, of God and nature. Pope.
UNLIKENESS. n. f. Dissimilitude; want of resemblance.
Imitation pleases, because it affords matter for enquiring into the truth or falsehood of imitation, by comparing its likeness or, unlikely with the original. Dryden.
UNLIMITABLE. adj. Admitting no bounds.
He tells us 'tis unlimited and unlimitable. Locke.
UNLIMITED. adj.
1. Having no bounds; having no limits.
So unlimited is our impotence to recompence or repay God's dilection, that it fetters our very wishes. Boyle.
It is some pleasure to a finite understanding, to view unlimited excellencies, which have no bounds, though it cannot comprehend them. Tillotson.
2. Undefined; not bounded by proper exceptions.
With gross and popular capacities, nothing doth more prevail than unlimited generalities, because of their plainness at the first sight; nothing lets, with men of exact judgment because such rules are not fite to be trusted over far. Hooker.
3. Unconfined; not restrained.
All the evils that can proceed from an untied tongue, and an ungovern'd, unlimited will, we put upon the account of drunkenness. Taylor.
Ascribe not unto God such an unlimited exercise of mercy, as may destroy his justice. Rogers.
Husbands are commended not to trust too much to their wives owning the doctrine of unlimited conjugal fidelity. Arbutnot.
UNLIMITEDLY. adv. Boundlessly; without bounds.
Many ascribe too unlimitedly to the force of a good meaning, to think that it is able to bear the fires of whatsoever commissions they shall lay upon
it. Decay of Piet.
UNLINEAL. adj. Not coming in the order of succession.
They put a barren scepter in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand,
No son of mine succeeding. Shakespeare.
TO UNL'N. v. a. To untwist; to open.
About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself;
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly Seemg Orlando, it unlick'd itself. Shakespeare.
UNMELTED. adj. Unmelted; undil-solved.
Their huge, unwieldy lamps remained in the melted matter rigid and unsoften'd, floating in it like cakes of ice in a river. Addison.
TO UNLOAD. v. a.
1. To disburden; to exonerate; to free from load.
Like an ass, whose back with ingots bows,
Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
And death unloadeth thee. Shakespeare.
Vain man, forbear, of cares unload thy mind;
Forget thy hopes, and give thy fears to wind. Cresset.
Some to unload the fertile branches run. Pope.
2. To put off any thing burdensome.
To you duke Humphry must unload his grief.
Shakespeare.
Nor can my tongue unload my heart's great burthen. Shakespeare.
TO UNLOCK. v. a.
1. To open what is shut with a lock.
I have seen her unlock her closet, take forth paper. Shakespeare.
She springs a light,
Unlocks the door, and, entering out of breath,
The dying law, and instruments of death.
Dryden.

2. To open in general.

My party, my passion, my business means,
 He all unlock'd to your occasions. Shakespeare.
 I yielded, and unlock'd her all my heart.
 Who, with a gain of manhood well resolv'd,
 Might easily have shook off all her snares. Milton.
 Good is an advantage to cold clays, in that it warms them, and unlocks their binding qualities.
Mortimer.

A mixture of quick-lime unlocks the salts that are engag'd in the viscid juices of some scorbutic persons. Arbuthnot.

Thy forests, Windfor! and thy green retreats Invite my lays. Be present, Sylvan maids!
 Unlock your springs, and open all your shades. Pope.

UNLOCKED. adj. Not fastened with a lock.

UNLOOKED. adj. Unexpected; not UNLOOKED for. } foreseen.

Yet perhaps had their number prevailed, if the king of Pontus had not come unlooked for to their succour. Sidney.

How much unlock'd for is this expedition!
Shakespeare.

God, I pray him
 That none of you may live your natural age,
 But by some unlock'd accident cut off. Shakespeare.
 Whatsoever is new is unlock'd for; and ever it incites them, and piques others. Bacon.

From that high hope, to what relapse
 Unlock'd for are we fall'n! Paradise Regained.
 Your affairs I have recommended to the king,
 but with unlock'd success. Denham.

Nor same I slight, nor for her favours call;
 She comes unlock'd for, if she comes at all. Pope.
 To UNLOCK. v. a. To loose. A word perhaps barbarous and ungrammatical, the particle prefixed implying negation;
 so that to unlock, is properly to bind.

York, unlock your long imprison'd thoughts,
 And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart. Shakspeare.
 The weak, wanton Cupid
 Shall from your neck unlock his am'rous fold;
 And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
 Be shook to air. Shakspeare.

Turn him to any cause of folly;
 The gordian knot of it he will unlock,
 Familiar as his garter. Shakspeare.
 It rested in you,
 To unlock this tied-up justice when you pleas'd.
Shakspeare.

The latchet of his shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unlock. Mark.

He that should spend all his time in tying inextricable knots only to baffle the industry of those that should attempt to unlock them, would be thought not much to have served his generation.
Decay of Piety.

To UNLOOSE. v. n. To fall in pieces; to lose all union and connection.

Without this virtue, the publick union must un-loose; the strength decay; and the pleasure grow faint. Collier.

UNLOOSE. adj. [A word rarely used.]
 Not to be lost.

Whatever may be said of the unloose mobility of atoms, yet divers parts of matter may compose bodies that need no other cement to unite them, than the just position and resting together of their parts, whereby the air, and other fluids that might dissipate them, are excluded. Boyle.

UNLOVED. adj. Not loved.

As love does not always reflect itself, Zelmene, though reason there was to love I'll thus, yet could not ever persuade her heart to yield with that pain to Palladius, as they feel, that feel unloved love. Sidney.

What though I be not fortunate;
 But miserable not, to love unloved! Shakspeare.
 He was generally unloved, as a proud and supercilious person. Clarendon.

UNLOVELINESS. n. s. Unamiableness;
 inability to create love.

The old man, growing only in age and affection, followed his suit with all means of unloveliness, large promises, and each thing else that might help to counterail his own unloveliness. Sidney.

UNLOVELY. adj. That cannot excite love.
 Therefore, by this word generally understood intended than barely negation. See UN-LOVELINESS.

UNLOVING. adj. Unkind; not fond.

Thou, blest with a goodly son,
 Didst yield content to disinherit him;
 Which arg'd thee a most unloving father. Shakspeare.

UNLUCKILY. adv. Unfortunately; by ill luck.

Things have fallen out so unluckily,
 That we have had no time to move our daughter.
Shakspeare.
 An ant dropt unluckily into the water. L'Estr.
 A fox unluckily crossing the road, drew off a considerable detachment. Addison.

UNLUCKY. adj.
 1. Unfortunate; producing unhappiness.

This word is generally used of accidents slightly vexatious.

You may make an experiment often, without meeting with any of those unlucky accidents which make such experiments misferry. Boyle.

2. Unhappy; miserable; subject to frequent misfortunes.

Then shall I you recount a rueful case,
 Said he; the which with this unlucky eye
 I late beheld. Spenser.

3. Slightly mischievous; mischievously waggish.

His friendship is counterfeit, seldom to trust;
 His doings unluckie, and ever unjust. Tupper.

Why, cries an unlucky wag, a less bag might have served. L'Estrange.

There was a lad, th' unluckiest of his crew,
 Was still contriving something bad, but new. King.

4. Ill-omened; inauspicious.

When I appear, see you avoid the place,
 And baunt me not with that unlucky face. Dryden.

UNLUSTROUS. adj. Wanting splendour; wanting lustre.

Should I join gripes with hands
 Made hard with hourly sal blood, as with labour;
 Then glad myself with peeping in an eye,
 Pale and unlustrous as the smoky light
 That's fed with sinking tallow. Shakspeare.

To UNLUTE. v. a. To separate vessels closed with clymical cement.

Our antimony thus handled, affordeth us an ounce of sulphur, of so sulphureous a smell, that, upon the unluting the vessels, it infected the room with a scarce supportable stink. Boyle.

UNMADE. adj.
 1. Not yet formed; not created.

Thou wast begot in Demogorgon's hall,
 And saw'st the secrets of the world unmade. Spenser.
 Then might'st thou tear thy hair,
 And fall upon the ground as I do now,
 Taking the measure of an unmade grave. Shakspeare.

2. Deprived of form or qualities.

The first earth was perfectly unmade again, taken all to pieces, and fram'd a-new. Woodward.

3. Omitted to be made.

You may the world of more defects upbraid,
 That other works by nature are unmade;
 That she did never at her own expence
 A palace rear. Blackmore.

UNMAIMED. adj. Not deprived of any essential part.

An interpreter should give his author entire and unmaimed; the diction and the verification only are his proper province. Pope.

UNMAKABLE. adj. Not possible to be made.

If the principles or bodies are unalterable, they are also unmakeable by any but a divine power. Grew.

To UNMAKE. v. a. To deprive of former qualities before possessed; to deprive of form or being.

They've made themselves, and their suits now
 Does unmake you. Shakspeare.

God does not make or unmake things, in any experiment.
 Suppose I often poor and despicable thing.
 When such as these make, or unmake a king. Dryden.

Being this guide of the light within to the trial;
 God, when he makes the prophet, does not unmake
 the man. Locke.

To UNMAN. v. a.

1. To deprive of the constituent qualities of a human being, as reason.

What quite unman'd in folly? Shakspeare.
 Gross errors unman, and strip them of the very principles of reason and sober discourse. South.

2. To emascuate.

3. To break into irresolution; to deject.

Her clamours pierce the Trojans' ears,
 Unman their courage, and augment their fears. Dryden.

Ulysses vail'd his pensive head;
 Again unman'd, a shower of sorrows shed. Pope.

UNMANAGEABLE. adj.

1. Not manageable; not easily governed.

They'll judge every thing by models of their own,
 and thus are rendered unmanageable by any authority but that of absolute dominion. Glavinille.

None can be concluded unmanageable by the milder methods of government, till they have been thoroughly tried upon him; and if they will not prevail, we make no excuses for the obstinate. Locke.

2. Not easily wielded.

UNMANAGED. adj.

1. Not broken by horsemanship.

Like colts, or unmanaged horses, we start at dead
 bones and lifeless blocks. Taylor.

2. Not tutored; not educated.

Savage princes flash out sometimes into an irregular greatness of thought, and betray, in their actions, an unguided force, and unmanaged virtue. Fedor.

UNMANLIKE. adj.

1. Unbecoming a human being.

It is strange to see the unmanlike cruelty of mankind, who, not content with their tyrannous ambition, to have brought the others' virtuous patience under them, think their masterhood nothing, without doing injury to them. Sidney.

Where the act is unmanly, or the expectation contradictory to the attributes of God, our hopes we ought never to entertain. Collier.

2. Unsuitable to a man; effeminate.

By the greatness of the cry, it was the voice of man; though it was a very unmanlike voice, so to cry. Sidney.

New customs,
 Though never so ridiculous,
 Nay, let them be unmanly, yet are follow'd. Shakspeare.

This is in thee a nature but affected;
 A poor unmanly melancholy, sprung
 From change of fortune. Shakspeare.

My servitude, ignoble,
 Unmanly, ignominious, infamous. Milton.

Unmanly dread invades the French aston'd,
 And fright their useless arms they quit. Philips.

Think not thy friend can ever feel the soft Unmanly warmth and tenderness of love. Addison.

UNMANNERED. adj. Rude; brutal; un-civil.

You have a slanderous, beastly, unmanly tongue
 In your rude mouth, and favouring yourself, Unmanner'd lord. Pan Jansen.

If your barking dog disturb her ease,
 Th' unmanner'd mulefactor is arraign'd. Dryden.

UNMANNERLINESS. n. s. Breach of civility; ill behaviour.

A sort of unmannerliness is apt to grow up wit-young people, if not early restrained; and that a forwardness to interrupt others speaking. Locke.

UNMANNERLY. adj. Ill-bred; not civil not complaisant.

Sweetheart,
 I were unmanly to take you out,
 And not to kiss you. Shakspeare.

He will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being in full of unmanly sadness in his youth. Shakespeare.

Unmanly is both unmanly in itself, and fulsome to the reader. Dryden.
A divine dares hardly show his person among fine gentlemen; or, if he fall into such company, he is in continual apprehension that some great man of pleasure should break an unmanly jest, and render him ridiculous. Swift.

UNMANNERLY. adv. Uncivily.
Forgive me, if I have us'd myself unmannerly. Shakespeare.

UNMANNERED. adj. Not cultivated.
The land, in antique times, was savage wilderness; unpeopled, unmanner'd, unprov'd, unprais'd. Spenser.

UNMARKED. adj. Not observed; not regarded.
I got a time, unmarked by any, to steal away, I cared not whither, so I might escape them. Sidney.

This place unmark'd, though oft I walk'd the green, in all my progress I had never seen. Dryden.

Entering at the gate, conceal'd in clouds, He mix'd, unmark'd, among the busy throng, Borne by the tide, and pass'd unseen along. Dryden.

Unmark'd, unhonour'd at a monarch's gate. Pope.

UNMARRIED. adj. Having no husband, or no wife.
Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects, for they are light to run away. Bacon.

Husbands and wives, boys and unmarried'd maids. Dryden.

UNMASK. v. a.
1. To strip of a mask.
2. To strip of any disguise.

With full cups they had unmask'd his soul. Reformation.

Though in Greek or Latin they amuse us, yet a translation unmasks them, whereby the cheat is transparent. Glanville.

vering from the face.

Unmuffle, ye faint stars! and thou, fair moon,
That won't it to love the traveller's benison,
Scoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud,
And disinherit chaos, that reigns here
In double night, of darkness and of shades.
Milton.

UNMUSICAL. adj. Not harmonious; not pleasing by sound.

Let argument bear no unmusical sound,
Nor just interpose, sacred friendship to grieve.
Ben Jonson.

One man's ambition wants satisfaction, another's avarice, a third's spleen; and this discord makes up the very unmusical harmony of our murmurs.
Decay of Piety.

TO UNMuzzle. v. a. To loose from a muzzle.

Now unmuzzle your wisdom. Shakespeare.
Have you not let mine honour at the stake,
And baited it with all th' unmuzzled thoughts
Thy tyrannous heart can think? Shakespeare.

vessels; not to be navigated.

Pindar's unnavigable song
Like a swift stream from mountains pours along.
Cowley.

Some who the depths of eloquence have found,
In that unnavigable stream were drown'd. Dryden.
Let wit her sails, her oars let wisdom lend;
The helm let politick experience guide:
Yet cease to hope thy short-liv'd bark shall ride
Down spreading fate's unnavigable tide. Pope.

The ladies less were believed to be unnavigable.
Arbuthnot.

UNNECESSARY. adv. Without necessity; without need; needlessly.

To abrogate, without constraint of manifest harm thereby arising, had been to alter unnecessarily, in their judgment, the ancient received custom of the whole church. Hobbes.

'Tis highly imprudent, in the greatest of men, unnecessarily to provoke the monster. L'Estrange.
These words come in without any connexion with the story, and consequently unnecessarily. Brown.

UNNECESSARINESS. n. s. Needlessness.

These are such excuses as afford no middle for industry to exist, hope being equally out-dated by the desperateness or unsuccessfulness of an undertaking. Decay of Piety.

UNNECESSARY. adj. Needless; not wanted; useless.

The doing of things unnecessary, is many times
the cause why the most necessary are not done.
Hobbes.

Thou whoreison wret; thou unnecessary letter.
Shakespeare.

Let brave spirits, fitted for command by fit or land, not be laid by as persons unnecessary for the time. Bacon.

Lay that unnecessary fear aside;
Mine be the care new people to provide. Dryden.

Unnecessary coinage, as well as unnecessary revival of words, runs into affectation; a fault to be avoided on either hand. Dryden.

They did not only shun persecution, but affirmed that it was unnecessary for their followers to bear their religion through such fiery trials. Addison.

UNNEIGHBOURLY. adj. Not kind; not suitable to the duties of a neighbour.

Parasitus is but a barren mountain, and its in-

of it, but an imperfect velocity; and imports no more than an idle, unoperative complacency in the end, with a direct abhorrence of the means. Smith.

UNOPPOSED. adj. Not encountered by any hostility or obstruction.

Proud, art thou met? thy hope was to have reach'd
The height of thy aspiring, unoppos'd,
The throne of God unguarded. Milton.

To every public portion of the town
The curious gossamer will show its little
Is parties now they struggle up and down
As armies, nations, for very little. Dryden.
The people has a headlong torrent go,
And every dam they break or overflow
But unoppos'd they either lose their force,
Or wind in volumes to their former course. Dryden.

UNORDERLY. adj. Disordered; irregular.

Since some ceremonies must be used, every man would have his own fashion; whereas what other would be the issue, but infinite distraction and unorderly confusion in the church? Sanderson.

UNORDINARY. adj. Uncommon; unusual. Not used.

I do not know how they can be excused from murder, who kill monstrous births, because of an unordinary shape, without knowing whether they have a rational soul or no. Locke.

UNORGANIZED. adj. Having no parts instrumental to the motion or nourishment of the rest.

It is impossible for any organ to regulate itself:
much less may we refer this regulation to the animal spirits, an unorganised fluid. Grewe.

England now is left
To tug and scramble, and to part by th' tooth
The unowned interest of proud, swelling state. Shakespeare.

UNOWNED. adj.

1. Having no owner.

2. Not acknowledged; not claimed.

Of night or loneliness it recks me not;
I fear the dread events that dog them both,
Left some ill-greeting touch attempt the person
Of our unowned sister. Milton.

O happy, unown'd youths! your limbs can bear
The scorching dog star, and the winter's air;
While the rich infant, nurs'd with care and pain,
Thrills with each heat, and coughs with ev'ry rain. Gay.

To UNPACK. v. a.

1. To disturb; to exonerate.

I, the son of a dear father warner'd,
Must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words. Shakespeare.

2. To open any thing bound together.

He had a great parcel of glasses packed up, which when he had unpack'd, a great many cracked at themselves. Boyle.

UNPACKED. adj. Not collected by unlawful artifices.

The knight
Resolv'd to leave him to the fury
Of justice, and an unpack'd jury. Hudibras.

UNPAID. adj.

1. Not discharged.

Receive from us knee tribute not unpaid. Milton.

Now hecatomb unfain, nor vows unpaid,
On Greeks, accus'd, this dire confusion bring. Dryden.

What can atone, oh ever-injur'd shade!
Thy fate unpay'd, and thy rites unpaid? Pope.

2. Not receiving dues or debts.

How often are relations neglected, and tradesmen unpaid, for the support of the vanity! Collier.
Th' embroider'd silk, as last, he took'd his prize;

That suit, an unpaid tailor snatch'd away. Page

3. UNPAID for. That for which the price is not yet given; taken on trust.

Richer, than doing nothing for a hauberk;
Prouder, than robbing in unpaid for silk. Shaksp.

UNPAINED adj. Suffering no pain.
Too unequal work we find,
Against unequal arms to fight in pain;
Against unpa'nd, in pain. Milton.

UNPAINFUL adj. Causing no pain.
That is generally called hard, which will put us to pain, sooner than change nature; and that soft, which changes the situation of its parts, upon an easy and unpa'ful touch. Locke.

UNPALATABLE adj. Nauseous; disgusting.

The man who laugh'd but once to see an ass
Mumbling to make the cross grain'd thistles pass,
Might laugh again to see a jery chaw
The prickles of unpalatable law. Dryden.

A good man will be no more disturbed at the methods of correction, than by seeing his friend take unpalatable physic. Collier.

UNPARAGONED adj. Unequalled; unmatched.

Either your unparagon'd mistress is dead, or she's out-par'nd by a trifle. Shakspere.

UNPARALLELED adj. Not matched; not to be matched; having no equal.

The book of his good acts, whence men have read
His fame, unparallel'd, happily amplified. Shaksp.
Who had thought this chime had held
A deny for unparallel'd? Milton.

The father burst out again in tears, upon receiving this instance of an unpa'atlet's fidelity from one, who he thought had given himself up to the possession of another. Adisson.

O fact unparallel'd! Charles! best of kings!
What stars their black, disastrous influence shed
On thy nativity? Philips.

UNPARDONABLE adj. [unpardonable, Fr.] Irremissible.

It was thought in him an unpardonable offence to alter any thing; in us as intolerable, that we suffer any thing to remain unaltered. Hooker.

Oh, his a fault too unpardonable. Shakspere.
The kinder the waiter, the more unpardonable is the traitor. LeStrange.

Consider how unpardonable the refusal of so much grace must render us. Hogers.

UNPARDONABLY adv. Beyond forgiveness.

Luther's conscience turns these reasonings upon him, and insists, that Luther must have been unpardonably wicked in using maled for fifteen years.
Atterbury.

UNPARDONED adj.

1. Not forgiven.
How know we that our souls shall not this night be required, laden with those unpardoned sins for which we proposed to repent to-morrow? Rogers.

2. Not discharged; not cancelled by a legal pardon.

My returning into England unpardoned, hath destroyed that opinion. Raleigh.

UNPARDONING adj. Not forgiving.

Curse on th' unpard'ning prince, whose tears can draw
To no remorse; who rules by lion's law;
And deaf to pray'rs, by no submission bow'd,
Kends all a like, the penitent and proud! Dryden.

UNPARLIAMENTARINESS n. f. Contrariety to the usage or constitution of parliament.

Sensible he was of that distress; reprehending them for the unparliamentariness of their remonstrance in print. Clarendon.

UNPARLIAMENTARY adj. Contrary to the rules of parliament.

The secret of all this unprecedented proceeding in their matters, they must not impute to their freedom in debate, but to that unparliamentary habit of setting individuals upon their Rulers, who were hated by God and man. Swift.

UNPARTED adj. Undivided; not separated.

Too little it eludes the dazzled sight,
Becomes mix'd blackness, or unperted light. Prior.

UNPARTIAL adj. Equal; honest. Not in use.

Clear evidences of truth, after a serious and un-partial examination. Sunderfen.

UNPARTIALLY adv. Equally; indif-ferently.

Deem it not impossible for you to err; sit unpartially your own hearts, whether it be force of reason, or vehemency of affection, which hath bred these opinions in you. Hooker.

UNPASSABLE adj.

1. Admitting no passage.

Every country, which shall not do according to these things, shall be made not only unpassable for men, but most hateful to wild beasts. Fisher.

They are vast and unpassable mountains, which the labour and curiosity of no mortal has ever yet known. Temple.

You swell yourself as though you were a man of learning already; you are thereby building a most unpassable barrier against all improvement. Watts.

2. Not current; not sufficed to pass.

Making a new standard for money, must make all money which is lighter than that standard, unpassable. Locke.

UNPASSIONATE } adj. Free from pas-UNPASSIONATED } sion; calm; impartial.

He attended the king into Scotland, and was sworn a confessor in that kingdom; where, as I have been instructed by unpassionate men, he did carry himself with singular sweetness. Watson.

More sober heads have a set of misconceits, which are as absurd to an unpassionate reason, as those to our unbiassed senses. Glauville.

The rebukes, which their faults will make hardly to be avoided, should not only be in sober, grave, and unpassionate words, but also alone and in private. Locke.

UNPASSIONATELY adv. Without passion.

Make us unpassionately to see the light of reason and religion. King Charles.

UNPATHE adj. Untracked; unmarked
by passage.

A course more promising,
Than a wild dedication of yourselves
To unpath'd waters, undream'd shores; most certain to miseries enough. Shakspere.

UNPAID adj. Not given to pledge.

He roll'd his eyes, that witness'd huge dismay,
Where yet, unpa'nd, much learned lumber lay. Pope.

TO UNPAY v. a. To undo. A low ludicrous word.

Pay her the debt you owe her, and unpay the villany you have done her: the one you may do with sterling money, and the other with current repentance. Shakspere.

UNPEACEABLE adj. Quarrelsome; inclined to disturb the tranquillity of others.

Lord, purge out of all hearts those unpeaceable, rebellious, mutinous, and tyrannising, cruel spirits;
those pricks and haughtinesses, judging and condemning, and despising of others. Hammond.

The design is to restrain men from things which make them noxious to themselves, unpeaceable and troublesome to the world. Tillotson.

TO UNPECK v. a. To open any thing closed with a peg.

Unpeg the basket on the house's top;
Let the birds fly. Shakspere.

UNPENSIONED adj. Not kept in dependance by a pension.

Could pension'd Boswell lash in honest strain
Flatterers and bigots, ev'n in Louis's reign;
And I not limp the gliding off a knave, Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir or slave? Pope.

TO UNPEOPLE v. a. To depopulate; to deprive of inhabitants.

The land
In antique times was savage wilderness,
Unpeopled, unmanur'd. Spenser.

Shall war unpeopled this my realm? Shakspere.

To few unknown
Long after; now unpeopled, and untrod. Milton.
The lofty mountains feed the savage race,
Yet few, and strangers, in th' unpeopled place.

He must be thirty-five years old, a doctor of the faculty, and eminent for his religion and honesty; that his rashness and ignorance may not be the commonwealth. Drake.

UNPERCEIVED adj. Not observed; not heeded; not sensibly discovered; not known.

The allies, wind unperceived shakes off. Bacon.
He alone

To find where Adam shelter'd, took his way,
Not unperceiv'd of Adam.

Thus daily changing, by degrees, I'd wish Still quitting ground, by unperceiv'd decay,
And steal myself from life, and melt away in air
Unperceiv'd the heav'n with stars were hung. Drake.

Oh in pleasing tasks we wear the day,
While summer suns roll unperceiv'd away. Pope.

UNPERCEIVEDLY adv. So as not to be perceived.

Some obnoxious particles, unperceivedly, se-cated themselves to it. Psalm.

UNPERFECT adj. [unparfait, Fr. imperfectus, Latin.] Incomplete.

Apelles's picture of Alexander at Typhesus, and his Venus, which he left at his death unperfected in Chios, were the chiefest. Peacock.

UNPERFECTNESS n. f. Imperfection, incompleteness.

Virgil and Horace spying the unperfection in Ennius and Plautus, by true imitation of Homer and Euripides, brought poetry to perfection. Apollon.

UNPERFORMED adj. Undone; not done.

A good law without execution is like an unper-formed promise. Trich.

UNPERISHABLE adj. Lasting to perpetuity; exempt from decay.

We are secured to reap in another world everlasting, unperishable felicities. Hume.

UNPERJURED adj. Free from perjury.

Beware of death; thou canst not die unperjur'd,
And leave an unaccomplish'd love behind.
Thy vows are mine. Dryden.

UNPERPLEXED adj. Disentangled; not embarrassed.

In learning, little should be proposed to the mind at once; and that being fully mastered, proceed to the next adjoining part, yet unknown, simple, un-perplexed proposition. Locke.

UNPERFORABLE adj. Not to be emitted through the pores of the skin.

Bile is the most unperforable of animal fluids. Arbuthnot.

UNPERSUADABLE adj. Inexorable; not to be persuaded.

He, finding his sister's unpersuadable melancholy, through the love of Amphylus, had for a time let her court. Sidney.

UNPERTURBED adj. Not turned to stone.

In many concentered plants, some parts remain unperturb'd; that is, the quick and livelier parts remain as wood, and were never yet converted. Brown.

UNPHILOSOPHICAL adj. Unfuitable to the rules of philosophy, or right reason.

Your conceptions are unphilosophical. You forget that the brain has a great many small fibres in its texture: which, according to the different strokes they receive from the animal spirits, awaken a correspondent idea. Collier.

It became him who created them to set them in order: and if he did so, it is unphilosophical to look for any other origin of the world, or to pretend that it might arise out of chaos by the mere laws of nature.

UNPHILOSOPHICALLY, adv. In a manner contrary to the rules of right reason. They forget that he is the first cause of all things, and discourse most unphilosophically, absurdly, and unsensibly to the nature of an infinite being; whose influence must set the first wheel a-going.

UNPHILOSOPHICALNESS, n. f. Incongruity with philosophy.

I could dispense with the unphilosophicalness of this their hypothesis, were it not unchristian.

To UNPHILOSOPHIZE, v. a. To degrade from the character of a philosopher. A word made by Pope.

Our passions, our interests flow in upon us, and we philosophize us into mere mortals.

UNPIERCED, adj. Not penetrated; not pierced.

The unpierc'd shade imbrown'd the noontide bow'rs.

True Witney broad-cloth with its shag unshorn, unpierc'd, is in the lasting tempest worn.

UNPILLED, adj. Deprived of pillars. See the cirque falls: the unpillared temple nods! Streets pav'd with heroes! Tiber chok'd with gods!

UNPILLOWED, adj. Wanting a pillow. Perhaps some cold bank is her bolster now, to grieve the rugged brow of some broad elm leans her unpillow'd head fraught with sad fears.

UNPIN, v. a. To open what is shut or fastened with a pin.

My love doth so approve him, that even his stubbornness, his checks and frowns, thy those unpinned have grace and favour in them.

Upon that spangled breast-plate which you wear, that thy eyes of busy fools may be kept there.

Who is the honest man? He that doth still and strongly good pursue, to God, his neighbour, and himself most true:

Whom neither force nor fawning can spin, or wrench from giving all their due.

UNPINNED, adj. Not marked with eyelet holes. Gabriel's pumps were all unpinn'd with the heel.

UNPITIED, adj. Not compassionate; not regarded with sympathetic sorrow. Richard yet lives; but at hand, at hand, his life's piteous and wretched end.

Rich in the world's opinion, and men's praise, And full in all we could desire, but days: He that is warn'd of this, and shall forbear to vent a sigh for him, or shed a tear; May he live long scorn'd, and unpity'd fall, And want a mourner at his funeral!

But he whose words and fortunes disagree, Aband' unpity'd, grows a publick jest.

He that does not secure himself of a flock of reputation in his greatness, shall most certainly fall unpitied in his adversity.

As the greatest curse that I can give, unpitied be depos'd, and after live.

As some fast turtle his lost love deplores; how far from Delia, to the winds I mourn, like unheard, unpity'd, and forlorn.

Passion unpity'd and successful love, and dangers in my heart, and aggravate all other griefs.

UNPITYFULLY, adv. Unmercifully; without mercy. He beat him most pityfully.

Nay, that he did not; he beat him most unpityfully.

UNPITYING, adj. Having no compassion. To shame, to chain, or to a certain grave, and so, unpitying guides! behold your fate.

UNPLACED, adv. Having no place or dependence.

UNPLACED, adv. Having no place or dependence.

UNPLACED, adv. Having no place or dependence.

To UNPLACED, v. a. To strip of plumes; to degrade.

In the most ordinary phenomena in nature, we shall find enough to inspire confidence, and un-prime dogmatizing.

UNPOETICAL, adj. Not such as be-UNPOETICK. comes a poet.

Nor for an epithet that fails,
Blue off your unpoetical tails.

Unpoet! why should you, in such veins,
Reward your fingers for your brains?

UNPOLISHED, adj. Not smoothed; not brightened by attrition.

Palladio, having noted in an old arch at Verona some part of the masonry cut in fine forms, and some unpolished, doth conclude, that the ancients did leave the outward face of their temples, or freestone, without any sculpture, till they were laid in the body of the building.

He affirms it to have been the ancient custom of all the Greeks, to let up unpolished stones, instead of images, to the honour of the Gods.

2. Not civilized; not refined.

Such as of old wife and employ'd to make Unpolish'd men their wild rears to forsake.

Those first unpolish'd matrons, big and bold,
Gave suck to infants of gigantic mould.

UNPOLITE, adj. [unpoli, Fr. impolite, Latin.] Not elegant; not refined; not civil.

Discourses for the pulpit should be cast into a plain method, and the reasons ranged under the words, first, secondly, and thirdly, however they may be now hurried to found unpolite, or unpolite-
able.

UNPOLLED, adj. [unpollut, Latin.] Not corrupted; not defiled.

Lay her 'till the earth;
And from her fair and unpolluted flesh
May violets spring!

I'll oft converse with heavenly beauties
Pegm to cut a beam on the outward shape,
The unpolluted temple of the mind,
And turn it by degrees to the soul's essence.

Though unpolluted yet with actual ill,
She last commits, who first but in her will.

UNPOPULAR, adj. Not fitted to please the people.

The practices of these men, under the covert of freed men, made the appearance of sincere devotion ridiculous and unpopular.

UNPORTABLE, adj. Not to be carried.

Had their cables of iron chains had any great length, they had been unportable; and being short, the ships must have sunk at an anchor in any stream of weather or counter-tide.

UNPOSSESS'D, adj. Not had; not held; not enjoyed.

He claims the crown —
— Is the chair empty? is the sword unpossess'd?
Is the king dead? the empire unpossess'd?

Such vast roots in nature unpossess'd
Py living soul, desert, and desolate,
Only to mine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light.

The cruel something unpossess'd Corrodes and leaves all the will.

UNPOSSESSING, adj. Having no possession.

Thou unpossessing bastard, dost thou think,
That I would stand against thee?

UNPRACTICABLE, adj. Not feasible.

I tried such of the things that come into my thoughts, as were not in that place and time un-practicable.

UNPRACTISED, adj. Not skilful by use and experience; raw; being in the state of a novice.

The tall firm of me
Is an unlesson'd girl, untaught, unpractis'd.

UNPRACTISED, adj. Not skilful by use and experience; raw; being in the state of a novice.

The tall firm of me
Is an unlesson'd girl, untaught, unpractis'd.

The tall firm of me
Is an unlesson'd girl, untaught, unpractis'd.

UNPRACTISED, adj. Not skilful by use and experience; raw; being in the state of a novice.

The tall firm of me
Is an unlesson'd girl, untaught, unpractis'd.

UNPRACTISED, adj. Not skilful by use and experience; raw; being in the state of a novice.

The tall firm of me
Is an unlesson'd girl, untaught, unpractis'd.

Unpractic'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Milt.
I am young, a novice in the trade;
The fool of love, unpractic'd to persuade,
And want the soothing arts. Dryden.

s. Not known; not familiar by use.

His tender eye, by too direct a ray,
Was clouded, and lying from unpractic'd day. Prior.
UNPRACTICED. adj. Not celebrated; not praised.

The land
In antique times was savage wilderness;
Unpeopled, unmanur'd, unprov'd, unprais'd. Spenser.

If young African for suns
His wasted country freed from Punick rage,
The deed becomes unprais'd, the man at least,
And justice, though but verbal, his reward. Milton.
Not pass unprais'd the vest and veil divine,
Which wand'ring foliage and rich flow'rs entwining. Dryden.

UNPRECARIOUS. adj. Not dependant on another.

The stars, which grace the high expansion bright,
By their own beams, and unprecarious light,
At a vast distance from each other lie. Blackmore.

UNPRECEDENTED. adj. Not justifiable by any example.

The secret of all this unprecedented proceeding
In their matters, they must not impute to freedom. Swift.

To UNPREDICT. v. a. To retract prediction.

Means I must use, thou say'st prediction else
Will unpredict, and fail me of the throne. Milton.

UNPREPARED. adj. Not advanced.
To make a scholar, keep him under, while he is young, or unprepared. Collier.

UNPREGNANT. adj. Not prolific; not quick of wit.

This deed unthaps me quite, makes me unpregnant. Shakespeare.

And dull to all proceedings. Shakespeare.
UNPREJUDICATE. adj. Not prepossessed by any settled notions.

A pure mind in a chaste body is the mother of wisdom, sincere principles, and unprejudicate understanding. Taylor.

UNPREJUDICED. adj. Free from prejudice; free from prepossession; not preoccupied by opinion; void of preconceived notions.

The meaning of them may be so plain, as that any unprejudiced and reasonable man may certainly understand them. Tillotson.

Several, when they had informed themselves of our Saviour's history, and examined, with unprejudiced minds, the doctrines and manners of his disciples, were so struck, that they professed themselves of that sect. Addison.

UNPRELATICAL. adj. Unsuited to a prelate.

The archbishop of York, by such unprelatical, ignominious arguments, in plain terms advised him to push that act. Clarendon.

UNPREPARED. adj. Not prepared in the mind beforehand.

Ask me what question thou canst possible,
And I will answer unprepared. Shakespeare.
She dictates to me stumbling, or inspires Early my unprepared verse. Milton.

The flow of speech makes unprepared harangues, or converse readily in languages that they are but little acquainted with. Addison.

UNPREPARED. adj. Not fitted by previous measures.

In things which most concern
Unprais'd, unprepar'd and still to seek. Milton.
To come unprepared before him, is an argument that we do not esteem God. Dappa.

Fields are full of eyes, and woods have ears;
For thus the wife are ever on their guard,
For, unforeseen, they say, is unprepar'd. Dryden.

2. Not made fit for the dreadful moment of departure.

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No; heavens forbid. Shakespeare.
My unprepar'd and unrepenting breath
Was snatch'd away by the swift hand of death. Reform.

UNPREPAREDNESS. n. s. State of being unprepared.

I believe my innocency and unpreparedness to assert my rights and honour, make me the most guilty in their esteem; who would not so easily have declared a war against me, if I had first assaulted them. King Charles.

UNPREPOSSESSED. adj. Not prepossessed; not preoccupied by notions.

The unprepossessed on the one hand, and the well-disposed on the other, are affected with a due fear of these things. South.

It finds the mind naked, and unprepossessed with any former notions, and so easily and sensibly gains upon the assent. South.

UNPRESSED. adj.

1. Not pressed.
Have I my pillow left unpress'd in Rome? Shakespeare.

In these soft shades, unpress'd by human feet,
Thy happy Phœnix keeps his balmy seat. Tickell.

2. Not enforced.
They left not any error in government unmentioned, or unpress'd, with the sharpest and most pathetic expressions. Clarendon.

UNPRITENDING. adj. Not claiming any distinctions.

Bad writers are not ridiculed, because ridicule ought to be a pleasure; but to undecieve and vindicate the honest and unpretending part of mankind from imposition. Pope.

UNPREVAILING. adj. Being of no force.

Threw to earth this unprevailing woe. Shaksp.
UNPREVENTED. adj.

1. Not previously hindered.
A pack of sorrows, which would press you down,
If unprevent'd, to your timeless grave. Shakespeare.

2. Not preceded by any thing.

Thy grace
Comes unprevent'd, unimplo'd, unthought. Milton.
UNPRINCIPALLY. adj. Unsuited to a prince.

I could not have given my enemies greater advantages, than by so unprincipally an inconsistency. King Charles.

UNPRINCIPLED. adj. Not settled in tenets or opinions.

I do not think my sister so to seek,
Or so unprincipled in virtue's book,
As that the single want of light and noise
Could stir the constant mood of her calm thoughts. Milton.

Others betake them to state affairs, with souls so unprincipled in virtue and true generous breeding, that flattery, and court shifts, and tyrannous aphorisms, appear to them the highest points of wisdom. Milton.

UNPRINTED. adj. Not printed.

Defer it, till you have finished these that are yet unprinted. Pope.

UNPRISABLE. adj. Not valued; not of estimation.

A haubling vessel was he captain of,
For shallow draught and bulk unprisable. Shaksp.

UNPRISONED. adj. Set free from confinement.

Several desires led parts away,
Water declin'd with earth, the air did stay;
Fire rose, and cash from other but melted,
Themselves unprison'd were, and purify'd. Donne.

UNPRIS'D. adj. Not valued.

Not all the dukes of wat'rish Burgundy
Can buy this unpris'd, precious maid of me. Shakespeare.

UNPROCLAIMED. adj. Not notified by a publick declaration.

The Syrian king, who to surprise
One man, assassin-like, had levied war, War unproclaim'd. Milton.

UNPROFANED. adj. Not violated.
Unprofan'd shall be her arms, and unprofan'd
Her holy laubs with any human hand;
And in a durable tomb laid in her native land. Dryden.

UNPROFITABLE. adj. Useless; serving no purpose.

The church being eased of unprofitable labours, needful offices may the better be attended. Hooker.
Should he reason with unprofitable talk? J. J.

My son Orestes I have begotten in my bonds, which in time past was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and me. Phedon.

They receive aliment sufficient, and yet no more than they can well digest; and withal sweat out the coarsest and unprofitablest juice. Bacon.

It is better to fall honourably, than to survive in an unprofitable and unglorious life. L'Estrange.

Then they who brothers' better claim disown,
Defraud their clients, and, to lucre sold,
Sit brooding on unprofitable gold. Dryden.

With shame and sorrow fill'd,
For plotting an unprofitable crime. Dryden.

An ox that waits the coming blow,
Old and unprofitable to the plough. Dryden.

With tears so tender,
As any heart, but only her's could move;
Trembling before her bolted doors he stood,
And there pour'd out th' unprofitable flood. Dryden.

UNPROFITABLENESS. n. s. Uselessness.

We are so perfused of the unprofitableness of your science, that you can but leave us where you find us; but if you succeed, you increase the number of your party. Addison.

UNPROFITABLY. adv. Uselessly; without advantage.

I should not now unprofitably spend Myself in words, or catch at empty hope,
By airy ways, for solid certainties. Ben Jonson.

Our country's cause,
That drew our swords, now wrecks 'em from our hands,
And bids us not delight in Roman blood Unprofitably shed. Addison.

UNPROFITED. adj. Having no gain.

Be clamorous, and keep all civil bounds,
Rather than make unprofit'd return. Shakespeare.

UNPROFITICK. adj. Barren; not productive.

Great rains drown many insects, and render their eggs unprofitick, or destroy them. Male.

UNPROMISSING. adj. Giving no promise of excellence; having no appearance of value.

If he be naturally listless and dreaming, this unpromising disposition is none of the easiest to be dealt with. Locke.

An attempt as difficult and unpromising of success, as if he should make the assay, to produce some new kinds of animals out of such senseless materials. Bentley.

UNPROMOUNCED. adj. Not uttered; not spoken.

Mad imperfect words, with childish trips,
Unpromounc'd, slide through my infant lips. Milton.

UNPROPER. adj.

1. Not peculiar.
Millions nightly lie in those unproper beds,
Which they dare swear peculiar. Shakespeare.

2. Unfit; not right.

UNPROPERLY. adv. Contrarily to propriety; improperly.

I kneel before thee, and unproperly
Shew duty as mistaken all the while Between the child and parent. Shakespeare.

UNPROPTIOUS. adj. Not favourable; insuspicious.

'Twas when the dog-star's unpropitious ray Smote ev'ry brain, and wither'd ev'ry bay, Sick was the sea. Pope.

UNPROPORTIONED. adj. Not suited to something else.

Give thy tongue no tongue,
Nor any unproportion'd thought his act. Shaksp.
UNPROPOS'D. adj. Not proposed.

The means are unpropp'd.
UNPROPPED, adj. Not supported; not upheld.

He lives at random, carelessly diffus'd,
With languish'd head unpropp'd,
As one past hope, abandon'd,
And by himself given over.

The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves; the nerves no more sustain The bulk; the bulk, unpropp'd, falls headlong on the plain.

UNPROSPEROUS, adj. [improsser, Lat.]
Unfortunate; not prosperous.

The winter had been very unprosperous and unsuccessful to the king.
Nought unprosp'rous shall thy ways attend,
Born with good omens, and with heav'n thy friend.

UNPROSPEROUSLY, adv. Unsuccessfully.

When a prince fights justly, and yet unprosperously, if he could see all those reasons for which (and hath he ordered it, he would think it the most reasonable thing in the world.

UNPROTECTED, adj. Not protected;
not supported; not defended.

By woeful experience, they both did learn, that to forsake the true God of heaven, is to fall into all such evils upon the face of the earth, as men, either defaute of grace divine, may commit, or unprotected from above, endure.

UNPROVED, adj.

1. Not tried; not known by trial.
In antique times was savage wilderness,
Unpeopled, unmanur'd, unprov'd, unprov'd.

There I found a fresh unprov'd knight,
Whose manly hands imbrued in guilty blood
Had never been.

2. Not evinced by argument.
There is much of what should be demonstrated,
left unprov'd by those chymical experiments

To UNPROVIDE, v. a. To divest of resolution or qualifications; to unfurnish.
I'll not expostulate with her, lest
Her beauty unprovide my mind again.

Prosperity, inviting every sense
With various arts to unprovide my mind;
What but a Spartan spirit can sustain
The shocks of such temptations?

UNPROVIDED, adj.
1. Not secured or qualified by previous measures.

Where shall I find one that can steal well? O, for a fine thief of two and twenty, or thereabout; I am heavily unprovided.

With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body, lanc'd my arm.
Tears, for a stroke foretold, afford relief;
But unprovided for a sudden blow,
Like Niobe we marble grow,
And petrify with grief.

2. Not furnished; not previously supplied.
Those unprovided of tackling and vidual are forced to sea.

The seditious had neither weapons, order, nor counsel; but, being in all things unprovided, were soon like beasts.

The ambitious conspire with her son in joy'd,
And, in his brother's absence, has design'd
The unprovided towns to take.

True zeal is not a solitary, melancholy grace, as if only fit to dwell in mean minds; such as are nearly unprovided of all other natural, moral, or spiritual abilities.

Courts are seldom unprovided of persons under this character, on whom most employments naturally fall.

UNPROVOKED, adj. Not provoked.

The tearing earth, yet gullible of the plough,
And unprovok'd, the fruitful breast of the plough,
Let them, farthest off, and from the methods of encouraging a rebellion to dissimulation, and to unprovoked.

UNPROVING, adj. Giving no offence.
I stabbed him a stranger, unproving, unprovoked, five.

UNPROVED, adj. Not cut; not lopped.

The whole land is full of weeds;
Her fruit-trees all unprov'd.

UNPUBLICK, adj. Private; not generally known, or seen.

Virgins must be retired and unpublick: for all freedom of society is a violence done to virginity, not in its natural, but in its moral capacity: that is,
it loses part of its severity and strictness, by publishing that person, whose work is religious, whose thoughts must dwell in heaven.

UNPUBLISHED, adj.
1. Secret; unknown.

All bless'd souls;
All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears.

2. Not given to the publick.
Apply your care wholly to those which are unpublished.

UNPUNISHED, adj. [impunis, Fr.] Not punished; suffered to continue in impunity.

Bind not one sin upon another, for in one thou shalt not be unpunished.

Divine justice will not let oppression go unpunish'd.

The vent'rous victor march'd unpunish'd hence,
And seem'd to boast his fortunate offence.

UNPURCHASED, adj. Unbought.
Unpurchas'd plenty our full tables loads,
And part of what they lent, return t' our gods.

UNPURGED, adj. Not purged; unpurified.

Is Brutus sick?
And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To tempt the rheumy and unpurged air,
To add unto his sickness?

In her visage round those spots, unpurged,
Vapours not yet into her substance turn'd.

UNPURIFIED, adj.
1. Not freed from recrement.

2. Not cleaned from sin.
Our sinful nation having been long in the furnace,
is now come out, but unpurified.

UNPURPOSED, adj. Not designed; not intentional.

Do it,
Or thy precedent services are all
But accidents unpurpos'd.

UNPURSUED, adj. Not pursued.
All night the dreadful angel unpursued
Through heav'n's wide champain held his way.

UNPUTRIED, adj. Not corrupted by rottenness.

Meat and drink last longer unputrified, or unsour'd, in winter than in summer.

No animal unputrified, being burnt, yields any alkaline salt, but, putrified, yields a volatile alkali.

UNQUALIFIED, adj. Not fit.
Till he has denuded himself of all these incumbrances, he is utterly unqualified for these agonies.

All the writers against christianity, since the revolution, have been of the lowest rank in regard to literature, wit, and sense; and upon that account wholly unqualified to propagate heretics, unless among a people already abandoned.

Tories are more hated by the zealous whigs, than the very papists, and as much unqualified for the smallest offices.

To UNQUALIFY, v. a. To disqualify;
to divest of qualification.

Arbitrary power is diminish'd the base of the female figure, and unqualify a woman for an evening walk.

Our private misfortune may unqualify us for charity; but reflect, whether they may not have been unqualify'd by their own misfortune, and by the misfortune of others.

Death's unqualify me for all company. Swift
UNQUALIFIABLE, adj. Such as cannot be impugned.

There arise unto the examination such satisfactory and unqualifiable reasons, as may confute the charges generally received.

To UNQUEEN, v. a. To divest of the dignity of queen.

Enshrine me,
Then lay me forth; although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me!

UNQUEENCHABLE, adj. Unextinguish-
able.

We represent wildfires burning in water and unquenchable.

The people on their holidays,
Impetuous, insolent, unquenchable.

The criminal's penitence may have numbered him among the saints, when our unretreated un-charitableness may send us to unquenchable flames.

Government of the Tongue.
Our love of God, our unquenchable desires to promote our well-grounded hopes to enjoy his glory, should take the chief place in our zeal.

UNQUEENCHABLENESS, n. f. Unextinguishableness.

I was amazed to see the unquenchableness of this fire.

UNQUENCHED, adj.

1. Not extinguished.
We have heaps of dung, and of lime unquenched.

2. Not extinguishable.
Sadness, or great joy, equally dissipates the spirits, and immoderate exercise in hot air, wash unquenched thirst.

UNQUESTIONABLE, adj.

1. Indubitable; not to be doubted.
The duke's carriage was surely noble throughout; of unquestionable courage in himself, and rather fearful of samethan danger.

One reason that mathematical demonstrations are uncontroverted, is because interest hath no place in those unquestionable verities.

There is an unquestionable magnificence in every part of Paradise lost.

2. Such as cannot bear to be questioned without impudence: this seems to be the meaning here.

What were his marks? —
A lean cheek, which you have not; an unquestionable spirit, which you have not.

UNQUESTIONABLY, adv. Indubitably; without doubt.

If the fathers were unquestionably of the household of faith, and all to do good to them; then certainly their children cannot be strangers in this household.

St. Austin was unquestionably a man of parts, but, interposing in a controversy where his talent did not lie, shewed his zeal against the antipodes to very ill purpose.

UNQUESTIONED, adj.

1. Not doubted; passed without doubt.
Other relations in good authors, though we do not positively deny, yet have they not been unquestioned by some.

2. Indisputable; not to be opposed.
It did not please the gods, who instruct the
people;

And their unquestion'd pleasures must be stor'd.

3. Not interrogated; not examined.

She muttering pray'r was holy rites she meant,
Through the divided crowd unquestion'd went.

UNQUIET, adj. Motionless; not alive.

His senses droop, his steady eyes unquiet;
And much he sighs, and yet he is not sick.

UNQUIETENED, adj. Not animated;
not ripened to vitality.

Heavy fate bears a secret board,
With sleeping unquieten'd life stor'd;

Which numerous, but unquiet and progeny,
Clasped, and enwrap'd within each other lie.

Blackmore.

UNQUIET. adj. [inquiet, French; inquietus, Latin.]

1. Moved with perpetual agitation; not calm; not still.

From grammatical flats and shallows, they are on the sudden transported to be tossed and tumbled with their unballasted ways, in tumultuous and unquiet depths of controversy. Milton.

2. Disturbed; full of perturbation; not at peace.

Go with me to church, and call me wife,
And then away to Venice to your friend;
For never shall you be by Portia's side
With an unquiet soul. Shakespeare.

Thy love laqueous to regain,
From thee I will not hide
What thoughts in my unquiet breast are risen.

Milton.

3. Restless; unsatisfied.

She glazes in balls, front boxes, and the ring;
A vain, unquiet, glittering, wretched thing. Pope.
Mirth from company is but a fluttering, unquiet motion, that beats about the breast for a few moments, and after leaves it empty. Pope.

UNQUIETLY. adv. Without rest.

Who's there besides foul weather? —
—One minded like the weather, most Unquietly. Shakespeare.

UNQUIETNESS. n. s.

1. Want of tranquillity.

Thou, like a violent noise, cam'st rushing in,
And mak'st them wake and start to new unquietness. Denham.

2. Want of peace.

It is most enemy to war, and most hateth unquietness. Spenser.

3. Restlessness; turbulence.

What pleasure can there be in that estate,
Which your unquietness has made me hate? Dryden.

4. Perturbation; uneasiness.

—Is my lord angry? —
—He went hence but now,
And certainly in strange unquietness. Shakespeare.
From inordinate love, and vain fear, comes all unquietness of spirit, and distraction of our senses. Taylor.

UNRA'CKED. adj. Not poured from the lees.

Hack the one vessel from the lees, and pour the lees of the racked vessel into the unracked vessel. Bacon.

UNRA'KED. adj. Not thrown together and covered. Used only of fires.

Cricket, to Windsor chimneys shall thou leap;
Where fires thou fadest unra'k'd, and hearths un-sweet. Shakespeare.

UNRA'CKED. adj. Not pillaged.

He gave that liberty for a prey into his soldiers, who left neither house nor corner thereof unra-cked. Knollys.

UNRA'NSOMED. adj. Not set free by payment for liberty.

Unransom'd here receive the spotless fair,
Accept the heretomb the Greeks prepare. Pope.

TO UNRA'VEL. v. a.

1. To disentangle; to extricate; to clear.

He has unraveled the studied sheats of great artificers. Pell.

There unravel all
This dark design, this mystery of fate. Addison.

With Machiavelian sagacity thou unravels'st intrigues of state. Arbutnot.

2. To disorder; to throw out of the present order.

How can any thing succeed well with people that are to be pleased with nothing, unless the ball of the universe may be unraveled, and the laws of Providence reversed? L'Estrange.

O the traitor's name!

I'll know it; I will not shall be conjured for it.
And nature all unra'vell'd. Dryden and Lee.

So prophage and sceptical an age takes a pride in unravelling all the received principles of reason and religion. Tillotson.

3. To clear up the intrigue of a play.

The solution or unravelling of the intrigue commence'd, when the reader begins to see the doubts cleared up. Pope.

'Tis thus supernaturally is the plot brought to perfection; nor is the unravelling of it less happily imagined. Shakespeare Illustrated.

UNRA'RORED. adj. Unshaven.

As smooth as Hebe's their unrav'or'd lips. Milton.

UNRA'CHED. adj. Not attained.

Labour with unequal force to climb
That lofty hill, unra'ch'd by former trace. Dryden.

UNRA'ED. adj.

1. Not read; not publicly pronounced.

These books are safer and better to be left publicly unra'ed. Hooker.

His nurse had starv'd, had not a piece unra'ed,
And by a player brought, suppli'd her bread, Dryden.

2. Untaught; not learned in books.

Uncertain whole the narrower spin,
The clown unra'ed, or half-ra'ed gentleman. Dryden.

UNRA'EDINESS. n. s.

1. Want of readiness; want of promptness.

This im-preparation and unra'edness when they find in us, then turn it to the soothing up of themselves in that necessary fancy. Hooker.

2. Want of preparation.

Nothing is so great an enemy to tranquillity, and a contented spirit, as the amazement and confusions of unra'edness and inconsideration. Taylor.

UNRA'EDY. adj.

1. Not prepared; not fit.

The tury knight
Departed thence, albe his wounds wide,
Not thoroughly heal'd, unra'edy were to ride. Spenser.

How now, my lords? what all unra'edy to? Shakespeare.

2. Not prompt; not quick.

From a temperate inactivity, we are unra'edy to put in execution the suggestions of reason; or by a content in every species of truth, we embrace the shadow thereof. Brown.

3. Awkward; ungain.

Young men, in the conduct of actions, use extreme remedies at first, and, that which doubteth all errors, will not acknowledge or retract them; like an unra'edy horse, that will neither stop nor turn. Bacon.

UNRA'AL. adj. Unsubstantial; having only appearance.

Hence, terrible shadow!
Unra'el mock'ry, hence! Shakespeare.

I with pain
Voyag'd th' unra'el, vast unbounded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton.

UNRA'ASONABLE. adj.

1. Not agreeable to reason.

No reason known to us; but that there is no reason thereof, I judge most unra'asonable to imagine. Hooker.

It is unra'asonable for men to be judges in their own cases; self-love will make men partial to themselves and their friends. Locke.

She entertained many unra'asonable prejudices against him, before she was acquainted with his personal worth. Addison.

2. Exorbitant; claiming or insisting on more than is fit.

Since every language is so full of its own properties, that what is beautiful in one, is often barbarous in another, it would be unra'asonable to have a translator to the narrow compass of his author's words. Dryden.

My intention in publishing your papers, is not to desecrate your protection of the following papers, which ought to be a very unra'asonable request, since, by being inscribed to you, you cannot recommend them without some suspicion of partiality. Seyt.

3. Greater than is fit; immoderate.

Those that place their hope in another world have, in a great measure, conquered dread of death, and unra'asonable love of life. Asterbury.

UNRA'ASONABLENESS. n. s.

1. Inconclendency with reason.

The unra'asonableness and presumption of those that thus project, have not so much as a thought, all their lives long, to advance so far as attitud. Hanmond.

2. Exorbitance; excessive demand.

The unra'asonableness of their propositions is not more evident, than that they are not the joint desires of the major number. King Charles.

A young university disputant was once a member of the unra'asonableness of a lady, with whom he was engaged in a point of controversy. Addison.

UNRA'ASONABLY. adv.

1. In a manner contrary to reason.

2. More than enough.

I'll not over the threshold, till my lord return from the wars.—Fye! you confine yourself most unra'asonably. Shakespeare.

TO UNRA'VE. v. a. [now unravel; from un and reave, or ravel; perhaps the same with rive, to tear, or break asunder.]

To unwind; to disentangle.

Penelope, for her Ulysses' sake,
Devis'd a web her woovers to deceive;
In which the work that the all day did make,
The same at night she did unra've. Spenser.

UNREBA'TED. adj. Not blunted.

A number of scencers try it out with unra'ebated swords. Hakewill.

UNREBU'KABLE. adj. Obnoxious to no censure.

Keep this commandment without spot, unrebuk-able, until the appearing of Christ. 1 Timothy.

UNRECEIVED. adj. Not received.

Where the signs and sacraments of his grace are not, through contempt, unra'ceived, or received with contempt, they really give what they promise, and are what they signify. Hooker.

UNRECLAIMED. adj.

1. Not tamed.

A savageness of unreclaimed blood,
Of general assault. Shakespeare.

2. Not reformed.

This is the most favourable treatment a sinner can hope for, who continues unreclaimed by the goodness of God. Rogers.

UNRECONCILABLE. adj.

1. Not to be appeased; implacable.

Let me lament,
That our stars, unreconcilable, should have divided
Our equalness to this. Shakespeare.

2. Not to be made consistent with.

He had many infirmities and sins, unreconcilable with perfect righteousness. Hammond.

UNRECONCILED. adj. Not reconciled.

If you bethink yourself of any crime
Unreconcil'd as yet to heav'n and grace,
Solicit for it straight. Shakespeare.

UNRECORDED. adj. Not kept in remembrance by public monuments.

Unrecorded left through many an age,
Worthy t' have not remain'd so long unra'ed. Milton.

The great Antiochus! a name
Not unrecorded in the rolls of fame. Pope.

UNRECORDED. adj. Not told; not related.

This is yet but young, and may be left
To some ears unrecorded. Shakespeare.

UNRECU'ITABLE. adj. Incapable of repairing the deficiencies of an army.

Empty and unrecusable columns of twenty men in a company. Milton.

UNRECU'RING. adj. Irremediable.

I found her unregarded;
Seeking to hide herself; as doth the dove,
That hath receiv'd some sorrowing wound.

UNREDUCED. adj. Not reduced.
The earl divided all the rest of the Irish countries unreduced, into shires.

UNREFORMABLE. adj. Not to be put into a new form.
The rule of faith is alone unmoveable and unreformable; to wit, of believing in one only God omnipotent, creator of the world, and in his son Jesus Christ, born of the virgin Mary.

UNREFORMED. adj.
1. Not amended; not corrected.
This general revolt, when overcome, produced a general reformation of the Irishry, which ever before had been unreformed.

2. Not brought to newness of life.
If he may believe that Christ died for him, as now he is an unreformed christian, then what needs he reformation?

UNREFRACTED. adj. Not refracted.
The sun's circular image is made by an unrefracted beam of light.

UNREFRESHED. adj. Not cheered; not relieved.
His symptoms are a spontaneous lassitude, being unrefreshed by sleep.

UNREGARDED. adj. Not heeded; not respected; neglected.
We, ever by his might,
Had threaten'd to ground the unregarded right.

UNREGISTERED. adj. Not recorded.
Unregistered in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out.

UNREINED. adj. Not restrained by the bridle.
Left from thy flying steeds unrein'd as once Bellerophon, though from a lower clime
Discounten'd on the Alban field I fall.

UNRESENTING. adj. Harsh; cruel; feeling no pity.
By many hands your father was subdued;
But only daughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford.

UNRELIABLE. adj. Admitting no factoring.
As no degree of stress is unreliable by his power, so no extremity of it is inconsistent with his compassion.

UNREPEALABLE. adj. Not capable of being removed.
Like Teneriff or Atlas unremov'd.

UNREPAID. adj. Not recompensed; not compensated.
Hast thou full pow'r
To measure out his torments by thy will;
Yet what couldst thou, tormentor, hope to gain?
Thy loss continues, unrepaid by pain.

UNREPEAL'D. adj. Not revoked; not abrogated.

The tenderness and unreservedness of his love made him think those his friends, or enemies, that were so to God. Bayle.

2. Openness; frankness.

I write with more unreservedness than ever man wrote. Pope.

UNRESISTED. adj.

1. Not opposed.

The ætherial spaces are perfectly fluid; they neither assist nor retard the planets, which roll through as free and unresisted as if they moved in a vacuum. Bentley.

2. Resistless; such as cannot be opposed.

Those gods! whose unresisted might hath sent me to these regions void of light. Dryd.

What wonder then, thy hairs should feel the quaking force of unresisted steel? Pope.

UNRESISTING. adj. Not opposing; not making resistance.

The sheep was unresist'd on no pretence, But meek and unresisting innocence: Dryden.

A patient useful creature. Since the planets move horizontally through the liquid and unresisting spaces of the heavens, where no bodies at all, or inconsiderable ones, occur, they may preserve the same velocity which the first impulse impressed. Bentley.

UNRESOLVABLE. adj. Not to be solved; insoluble.

For a man to run headlong, while his ruin stares him in the face; still to press on to the embraces of sin, is a problem unresolvable upon any other ground, but that sin infatuates before it destroys. South.

UNRESOLVED. adj.

1. Not determined; having made no resolution: sometimes with of.

On the western coast Ridesh a puissant navy: to our shores Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends, Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back. Shakspeare.

Tarnish, unresolv'd of flight, Movers tardy back, and just recedes from fight. Dry.

Rhodes is the sovereign of the sea no more; Their ships unraigg'd, and spent their naval force. Dryden.

UNRA'IGHT. adj. Wrong. In Spenser, this word should perhaps be unright.

What in most English writers used to be loose, and as it were unright, in this author is well grounded, timely framed, and strongly trusted up together. Gliffery to Kalcider.

Show that thy judgment is not unright. Wisdom.

UNRA'IGHTEOUS. adj. Unjust; wicked; sinful; bad.

Otharius here leapt into his room, And it usurped by unrighteous doom; But he his title justify'd by might. Spenser.

Within a month! Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears Had left the flushing in her galled eyes, She married—Oh most wicked speed! Shakspeare.

Let the wicked man forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord. Isiah.

UNRA'IGHTEOUSLY. adv. Unjustly; wickedly; sinfully.

For them Their foes a deadly Shibboleth devise: By which unrighteously it was decreed, That none to trust or profit should succeed, Who would not swallow first a poisonous wicked weed. Dryden.

A man may fall unrighteously under public disgrace, or is unrighteously oppressed. Collier.

UNRA'IGHTEOUSNESS. n. f. Wickedness; injustice.

Our Romanists can no more abide this proposition converted, than themselves. All say they, is a transgression of the law; but every transgression of the law is not sin. The apostle, therefore, turns it for us: all unrighteousness, says he, is sin; but every transgression of the law is unrighteousness, faith Austin upon this place. Hall.

Some things have a natural deformity in them, as perjury, perfidiousness, unrighteousness, and ingratitude. Tillotson.

UNRA'IGHTFUL. adj. Not rightful; not just.

Then, which know'st the way To plant unrightful kings, with know again To pluck him headlong from th' usurped throne. Shakspeare.

3. Too early.

Who hath not heard of the valiant, wife, and Jail Dorcas, whose words death doth yet, so many years since, draw tears from virtuous eyes? Sidney.

UNRIPENED. adj. Not matured.

Were you with these, you'd soon forget
The pale, unripen'd beauties of the north. Addison.
UNRIPENESS. n. s. Immaturity; want of ripeness.

The ripeness or unripeness of the occasion must ever be well weighed; and generally it is good to consult the beginnings of all great actions to Aristotle, with his hundred eyes; and the ends to Briareus, with his hundred hands. Bacon.

UNRIVALLED. adj.

1. Having no competitor.

Honour forbid! at whose unrival'd shrine
Ease, pleasure, virtue, all our sex resign. Pope.

2. Having no peer or equal.

To UNROLL. v. a. To open what is rolled or convolved.

O horror!

The queen of nations, from her ancient seat,
Is sunk for ever in the dark abyss;
Time has unroll'd her glories to the last,
And now clos'd up the volume. Dryden.

UNROMANTICK. adj. Contrary to romance.

It is a base unromantick spirit not to wait on you.
Swift.

To UNROOF. v. a. To strip off the roof

The rabble should have first unroof'd the city,
Ere to prevail'd with me. Shakespeare.

UNROOSTED. adj. Driven from the roof.

Thou dotard! thou art woman-air'd, unroosted,
By thy old dame Parollet-here. Shakespeare.

To UNROOT. v. a. To tear from the roots; to extirpate; to eradicate.

Since you've made the days and nights as one,
To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold; you do so grow in my requital,
That nothing can unroot you. Shakespeare.
Unroot the forest oaks, and bear away
Flcks, foids, and trees, an undisturb'd prey.
Dryden.

UNROUGH. adj. Smooth.

And many unrough youths, that even now
Protect their first of manhood. Shakespeare.

UNROUNDED. adj. Not shaped; not cut to a round.

Those unroll'd pistolets,
That more than common-shot avail or lets;
Which, negligently left unrounded, look Like many-angled figures in the back
Of some dread conjurer. Donne.

UNROYAL. adj. Unprincely; not royal.

By the advice of his envious counsellors, he sent them with unroyal reproaches to Mithridates and Pyrrhus, as if they had done traitorously. Sidney.

To UNRUFFLE. v. n. To cease from commotion, or agitation.

Where'er he guides his finny couriers,
The waves unruuffle, and the sea subsides. Dryden.

UNRUFFLED. adj. Calm; tranquil; not tumultuous.

Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand its back,
Calm and unruddled as a summer's sea,
When not a breath of wind stirs o'er its surface. Addison.

UNRUL'D. adj. Not directed by any superior power.

The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, unroll'd all the raging passions, unroll'd and undirected of any;
for they to whom she was committed, faintest in their labour, or fastest their change. Spenser.

UNRULINESS. n. s. (from unruly.) Turbulence; tumultuousness; licentiousness.

By the negligence of those who were hardly to be commanded, and by the dissipation of others who without leave were full of idleness, in this all border of viciousness increased. M.
The unruled and unruly of the nation.

or the reputation of justice. Although all their sacrifices they never furnished so much as one just South.

UNRULY. adj. Turbulent; ungovernable;
licentious; tumultuous.

In sacred bands of wedlock ty'd
To Thetis, a loose unruly swain;
Who had more joy to range the forest wide,
And chase the savage beast with busy pain. Spenser.

Down I come, like glittering Phaeton,
Wanting the manage of unruly jades. Shakespeare.
The best and foudest of his time hath been but rash; then must we look from his age to receive but unruly waywardness. Shakespeare.
The tongue is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison.
James.

Thou dost a better life, and nobler vigour give;
Dost each unruly appetite controul. Keats.
Love insults, disguised in the cloud,
And welcome force of that unruly crowd. Weller.

Passions kept their place, and transgressed not the boundaries of their proper natures; nor were the disorders begun, which are occasioned by the licency of unruly appetites. Clarendon.

You must not go where you may dangers meet.
Th' unruly sword will no distinction make,
And beauty will not there give wounds, but take. Dryden.

UNSAFE. adj. Not secure; hazardous;
dangerous.

If they would not be drawn to seem his adversaries, yet others should be taught how unsafe it was to continue his friends. Hooker.

With speed retir'd,
Where erst was thickest fight, th' angelick throng,
And left large field, unsafe within the wind
Of such commotion. Milton.

Uncertain ways unsafe are,
And doubt a greater mischief than despair. Denham.

Phlegyan robbers made unsafe the road. Dryden.

UNSAFELY. adv. Not securely; dangerously.

Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage,
Unsafely just, break loose on this mad age;
So bad, that thou thyself hadst no defence
From vice, but barely by departing hence. Dryden.

As no man can walk, so neither can he think, uneasily or unsafely, but in using, as his legs, so his thoughts, amiss; which a virtuous man never doth. Green.

UNSAID. adj. Not uttered; not mentioned.

Chanticleer shall with his words unsaid. Dryden.
That I may leave nothing material unsaid, among the several ways of imitation, I shall place translation and paraphrase. Felton.

UNSAULTED. adj. Not pickled or seasoned with salt.

The maritick scurvy, induced by too great quantity of sea-salt, and common among mariners, is cured by a diet of fresh unsalted things, and watery liquor acidulated. Arbuthnot.

UNSAUTED. adj. [insalutatus, Latin.]
Not saluted.

Gods! I prate;
And the most noble mother of the world
Leave unsaluted. Shakespeare.

UNSACTIFIED. adj. Unholy; not consecrated; not pious.

Her obsequies have been so far enlarged
As we have warranty; her death was doubtful;
And but that great command o'erflows the order,
She should in ground unsanctified have lodg'd
Till the last trumpet. Shakespeare.

UNSATISFIED. adj. [insatiabilis, Latin.]
Not to be satisfied; greedy without bounds.

Unsatisfiable in their longing to do all manner of good to all the creatures of God, but especially men. Hooker.

Consider the Roman, for his unsatisfiable greediness, was called the goliath of avarice. Raleigh.

UNSATISFACTORINESS. n. s. Failure of giving satisfaction.

That which most does not from such trials is their unsatisfactoriness, though they should succeed. Bayle.

UNSATISFACTORY. adj.

1. Not giving satisfaction.

2. Not clearing the difficulty.

That speech of Adam, The woman thou gavest me to be with me, gave me of the tree; and I did eat, is an unsatisfactory reply, and therein was involved a very impious error. Brown.

Latria to the cross, is point blank against the definition of the council of Nice; and it is an unsatisfactory answer to say, they only were against latria given to images for idolselves. Stillingfleet.

UNSATISFIED. adj.

1. Not contented; not pleased.

Queen Elizabeth being to resolve upon a great officer, and being by some put in some doubt of that person whom she meant to advance, said, She was like one with a lantern looking at a man, and seemed unsatisfied in the choice of a man for that place. Bacon.

Flashy wit, who cannot fathom a large discourse, must be very much unsatisfied of me. Digby.

2. Not settled in opinion.

Concerning the analytical preparation of gold they leave persons unsatisfied. Bayle.

3. Not filled; not gratified to the full.

Though he were unsatisfied in getting,
Yet in following he was most princely. Shakespeare.

Whether shall I, by justly plugging
Him whom I hate, be more unjustly cruel
To her I love? or being kind to her,
Be cruel to myself, and leave unsatisfied
My anger and revenge? Denham.

Eternity human nature cannot look into, without a religious awe; our thoughts are lost in the endless view, and return to us weary and unsatisfied, without finding bounds or place to fix on. Rogers.

UNSATISFIEDNESS. n. s. [from unsatisfied.] The state of being not satisfied.

Between my own unsatisfiedness in confidence, and a necessity of satisfying the importunities of some, I was persuaded to chuse rather what was safe, than what seemed just. King Charles.

That unsatisfiedness with transitory pleasures, that men deplore as the unhappiness of their nature, is indeed the privilege of it, as it is the prerogative of men not to be pleased with such fond toys as children doat upon. Bayle.

UNSATISFYING. adj. Unable to gratify to the full.

Nor is fame only unsatisfying in itself, but the desire of it lays us open to many accidental troubles. Addison.

UNSAVOURINESS. n. s. [from unsavoury.]

1. Bad taste.

2. Bad smell.

If we concede a national unsavouriness in any people, yet shall we find the Jews less so than than any. Brown.

UNSAVOURY. adj.

1. Tasteless.

Can that which is unsavoury be eaten without salt? or is there any taste in the white of an egg? Job.

2. Having a bad taste.

Unsavoury food, perhaps, Milton.

3. Having an ill smell; fetid.

Some may emit an unsavoury odour, which may happen from the quality of what they have taken. Brown.

4. Unpleasant; disgusting.

Things of so mean regard, although necessary to be ordered, are notwithstanding very unsavoury, when they come to be disputed of; because dispatation presupposes some difficulty in the matter. Hooker.

Unsavoury news; but how made he escape? Shakespeare.

To UNSAY. v. a. To retract; to recede;
to deny what has been said.

do, even in the very falling down, rather than those foods which for a while lie upon and buried in the earth; but afterward spring up again no less plentiful than at the first. Shakspeare.

3. Unfitted; unperformed.
 He was not unfitted in the affections of the court,
 but had not reputation enough to reform it: Clarendon.

UNSE'LFISH. adj. Not addicted to private interest.

The most interested cannot purpose any thing to much to their own advantage, notwithstanding which the inclination is nevertheless unselfish. Spenser.

UNSENT. adj.

1. Not sent.

2. UNSENT. fur. Not called by letter or messenger.

It a physician must go from house to house un-
sent for, and enquire, what woman hath a cancer, or what man a fistula, he would be as unwelcome
 as the disease itself. Taylor.

Somewhat of weighty consequence brings you here so often, and unsent for. Dryden.

UNSE'PARABLE. adj. Not to be parted;
 not to be divided.

Oh world, thy slippery turnst Friends now fast sworn,

Who twine as 'twere in love
Unseparable, shall, within this hour,
 break out to bitterest enmity. Shakspeare.

UNSE'PARATED. adj. Not parted.

There seek the Theban bard;
 To whom Persephone, entire and whole,
 gave to retain th' unseparated soul. Pope.

UNSE'RVICABLE. adj. Useless; bringing no advantage or convenience.

The best, important of his smarting wound,
 Though with his wings to fly above the ground,
 But his late wounded wing unserviceable found. Spenser.

'Tis certainly demonstrated, that the condensation and expansion of any proportion of the air, is always proportional to the weight incumbent upon it; so that, if the atmosphere had been much greater or less than it is, it would on the surface of the earth have been unserviceable for vegetation and life. Bentley.

It can be no unserviceable design to religion, to deceive men in so important a point. Rogers.

UNSE'RVICABLY. adv. Without use;
 without advantage.

It does not enlarge the dimensions of the globe, or he idly and unserviceably there; but part of it is introduced into the plants which grow thereon; and the rest either recombines again, with the ascending vapour, or is wafted down into rivers. Woodward.

UNSET. adj. Not set; not placed.

They urge that God felt nothing in his word un-described, nothing unset down; and therefore charged them strictly to keep themselves to that without any alteration. Houder.

To UNSETTLE. v. a.

1. To make uncertain.

Such a doctrine unsettles the titles to kingdoms and estates; for if the actions from which such feifdoms spring were illegal, all that is built upon them must be loose; but the last is absurd, therefore the first must be as likely. Arbutnot.

2. To move from a place.

As big as he was, did there need any great matter to unsettle him? LEStrange.

3. To overthrow.

UNSETTLED. adj.
 Not fixed in resolution; not determined;
 not steady.

A solemn silence and the best comforter
 To an unsettled fancy, cure thy brains. Shakspeare.

For such a business; these are I found
 So much unsettled. Shakspeare.

With them, a harvest of the king decreed,
 And all th' unsettled business of the land,
 Had, independent, they, voluntary. Shakspeare.

UNSETTLED. adj. Not settled;
 unsettled in mind and conduct.

A doctor's man deliberated betwixt the quins of a wambling stomach, and an unsettled mind. LEStrange.

Unsettled virtue stormy may appear;
 Honour, like mine, serenely is severe. Dryden.

Impartially judge, whether from the very first day that our religion was unsettled, and church government hung out of doors, the civil government has ever been able to fix upon a sure foundation. South.

2. Unequable; not regular; changeable.
 March and September, the two equinoxes, are the most windy and tempestuous, the most unsettled and unequal seasons in most countries. Bentley.

3. Not established.

My cruel fate,
 And doubts attending an unsettled state,
 For'd me to guard my coast. Dryden.

4. Not fixed in a place of abode.

David supposed that it could not stand with the duty which he owed unto God, to let himself in an house of cedar trees, and to behold the ark of the Lord's covenant unsettled. Hooker.

UNSETTLEDNESS. n. s.

1. Irresolution; undetermined state of mind.

The unsettledness of my condition has hitherto put a stop to my thoughts concerning it. Dryden.

2. Want of fixity.

When the sun shines upon a river, though its waves roll this way and that by the wind, yet, for all their unsettledness, the sun strikes them with a direct and certain beam. South.

UNSE'VEKED. adj. Not parted; not divided.

Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends
 I th' war, do grow together. Shakspeare.
 Their hands, though slack, no dissolution fear;
 Th' unsever'd parts the greatest prize still bear;
 Though loose, and fit to flow, they still cohere. Blackmore.

To UNSE'X. v. a. To make otherwise than the sex commonly is.

All you spirits
 That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here,
 And fill me, from the crown to th' toe, top full
 Of direst cruelty. Shakspeare.

UNSHAD'D. adj. Not clouded; not darkened.

 comprehensive vision, who eminently is all. Glanv.

UNSHAKEABLE. adj. Not subject to concussion. Not in use.

Your life stands,
 As Neptune's park, ribbed and paled in
 With rocks unshakeable, and roaring waters. Shakspeare.

UNSHAKED. adj. Not shaken. Not in use.

I know but one,
 That unshakable holds on his rank,
 Unshak'd of motion. Shakspeare.

UNSHAKEN. adj.

1. Not agitated; not moved.

Of violent birth, but poor validity;
 Which now, like fruits unripe, sticks on the tree,
 But fall unshaken when they mellow be. Shakspeare.

The wicked's spite against God is but like a madman's running his head against the wall, that leaves the wall unshaken, but dashes his own brains out. Boyle.

2. Not subject to concussion.

3. Not weakened in resolution; not moved.
 If such thou shoudst them,
 O patient Son of God! yet only shak'd Milton.

Employ is unshaken piety towards God, in unshaken duty to his viceroy. Arbutnot.

His unshaken was founded in reason, and imparted by virtue, and therefore did not lie at the mercy of ambition; his passion was no less steady and unshaken, than his reason. Shakspeare.

To UNSHAKLE. v. a. To loose from bonds.

A landable freedom of thought unshakles the minds from the narrow prejudices of education, and opens their eyes to a more extensive view of the public good. Addison.

UNSHA'MED. adj. Not shamed.

The brave man seeks not popular applause;
Unsham'd, though foil'd, he does the best he can;
 Force is of brutes, but honour is of men. Dryden.

Bliss, as thou hast part, to me is bliss;
 Tedious unshar'd with thee, and odious soon. Milton.

To UNSHEATH. v. a. To draw from the scabbard.

Executioner, unsheath thy sword. Shakspeare.
 Mowbray, the bishop Scroop, Hastings, and all
 Are brought to the correction of your law;
 There is not now a rebel's sword unsheath'd. Shakspeare.

Far hence ho souls profane!
 Now, Trojans, take the way thy fates afford;
 Assume thy courage, and unsheath thy sword. Dryden.

The Roman senate has resolv'd,
 Till time give better prospects, still to keep
 The sword unsheath'd, and turn its edge on Caesar. Addison.

Each chief his sev'nfold shield display'd,
 And half unsheath'd the shining blade. Pope.

For ever with corruption there to dwell. Milton.
Vindicate the honour of religion, by a pure and unspotted obedience to its precepts. Rogers.

UNSPARKED. adj. Not formed; irregular.
When he speaks,
'Tis like a chime a-mending, with terms un-sparked;

Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
Would seem hyperbolic. Shakespeare.

UNSTABLE. adj. [instabilis, Latin.]

1. Not fixed; not fast.
A popular state not founded on the general interests of the people, is of all others the most uncertain, unstable, and subject to the most easy changes. Temple
Thus air was void of light, and earth unstable. Dryden
See hamlets' seeds desert the stony town,
And wander roads unstable, not their own. Gay

2. Inconstant; irresolute.
Where gentry, title, wisdom,
Cannot conclude by the yea or no
Of general ignorance, it must omit Real necessities, and give way the while
To unstable lightness. Shakespeare.

A double-minded man is unstable. James.

UNSTABLE. adj. Not cool; not prudent;
not settled into discretion; not steady;

His unstable youth had long wandered in the common labyrinth of love, in which time, to warn young people of his unfortunate folly, he compiled these twelve epilogues. Spenser.

To the gay gardens his unstable desire
Him wholly carried, to retire his fighths. Spenser.
Will the king come, that I may breathe my last
In wholesome counsel to his unstable youth? Shakespeare.

Tell me, how will the world repute me,
For undertaking to unspaid a journey?
I fear it will make me scandalized. Shakespeare.

Wo to that land,
Which gapes beneath a child's unspaid command! Sandys.

UNSTABLE. n. f.

1. Indiscretion; volatile mind.
2. Uncertain motion.

The oft changing of his colour, with a kind of shaking unspaid over all his body, he might see in his countenance some great determination mixed with fear. Shakespeare.

UNSTAINED. adj. Not stained; not died; not discoloured; not dishonoured; not polluted.

Pure and unstained religion ought to be the highest of all cares appertaining to public regimen. Hume.

Ne let her waves with any filth be dy'd
But ever, like herself, unstain'd hath been try'd. Spenser.

I do commit into your hand
Th' unstained sword that you have us'd to bear,
With this remembrance, that you use the same
With a like bold, just, and impartial spirit
As you have done' gamit me. Shakespeare.

I will do it without fear or doubt,
To live an unstain'd wife to my sweet love. Shakespeare.

Your youth,
And the true blood which preps forth faintly
through it,
Do plaiisly give you out an unstain'd shepherd. Shakespeare.

The hooked chariot flood Unstain'd with hostile blood. Milton.

That good earl, once president
Of England's counsel, and her treasury;
Who liv'd in both unstain'd with gold or fee,
And left them both, more in himself content. Mil.

Her people guiltless, and her fields unstain'd. Johnson.

These, of the garter call'd, of faith unstain'd,
In fighting fields the laurel have obtain'd. Dryden.

nity.

U N S

High-banded Caesar will Against a twister. Shakespeare.

I would unspate myself, to be in a due resolution
Shakespeare.

UNSTABLE. adj. Contrary to statute.

That plea did not avail, although the lease were notionally unstable, the rent reserved being not a seventh part of the real value. Swift.

UNSTAYED. adj. Not stayed; not stayed.

With the issuing blood
Stille the valian, whose unlaunched thirst
You and young Rutland could not lusty. Shakespeare.

UNSTAYED. adj. Not fixed; not fast;
not resolute.

I'll send you matter,
As full of pearl and advent'rous spirit,
As to o'erwalk a current, coming loud,
On the unstable footing of a spear. Shakespeare.

UNSTAYED. adj.

1. Without any certainty.
2. Inconstantly; not consistently.

He that uses his words loosely and unstay'dly, will not be minded, or not understood. Lack.

UNSTAYED. n. f. Want of constancy;
irresolution; mutability.

A prince of this character will instruct us, by his example, to fix the unstay'dness of our points. Addison.

In the result, we find the same spirit of cruelty,
the same blindness, and obstinacy, and any cadence. Sage.

UNSTAYED. adj.

1. Inconstant; irresolute.
And her unstay'd hand hath often plac'd
Men in high pow'r, but seldom holds them fast. Denham.

No measures can be taken of an unstay'd mind,
full 'tis too much, or too little. L'Alphange.

While choice remains, he will be full unstay'dly,
And nothing but necessity can fix him. Ross.

2. Mutable; variable; changeable.
If the motion of the sun were as unequal as that of a ship driven by unstay'd winds, it would not at all help us to measure time. Locke.

3. Not fixed; not settled.

UNSTAYED. adj. Not soaked.
Other wheat was sown unstay'd, but watered twice a day. Bacon.

TO UNSTAY. v. a. To disarm of a sting.

He has disarm'd his afflictions, unstay'd his miseries; and though he has not the proper happiness of the world, yet he has the greatest that is to be enjoyed in it. South.

UNSTAYED. adj. Not limited.
In the works of nature is unstay'd goodness shown us by then author. Shelton.

tated.

Such steaming milks suffered to stand unstirred, let fall to the bottom a refinous substance. Boyle.

TO UNSTAY. v. a. To open by picking the stitches.

Cato well observes, though in the phrase of a taylor, friendship ought not to be unripp'd, but unspiced. Colver.

UNSTAYING. adj. Not bending; not yielding.

Such neighbour nearness to our sacred blood
Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize
Th' unspicing humors of my upright soul. Shakespeare.

TO UNSTAY. v. a. To free from stop or obstruction; to open.

Such white fumes have been afforded, by un-staying a liquor diaphanous and red. Boyle.

The eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf unstopped. Isaiah.

One would wonder to find such a multitude of niches unstopped. Addison.

U N S

UNSTOPPED. adj. Meeting no resistance.
The flame unstopp'd, at first more fury gains,
And Vulcan rides at large with loosen'd reins. Dryden.

UNSTRAINED. adj. Easy; not forced.
By an easy and unstrained derivation, it implies
the breath of God. Hakewill.

UNSTRAITENED. adj. Not contracted.
The eternal wisdom, from which we derive our being, enriched us with all these ennoblements, that were suitable to the measures of an unstrained goodness, and the capacity of such a creature. Glanville.

UNSTRENGTHENED. adj. Not supported, not assisted.

The church of God is neither of capacity to work,
nor to strengthen with authority from above,
but that her laws may exact obedience at the hand of her own children. Hobbes.

TO UNSTRING. v. a.

1. To relax any thing strung; to deprive of strings.

My tongue's use is to me no more
Than an unstring'd viol or harp. Shakespeare.

They journey toilsome, unattuned with length
Of march, unstruck with horror at the sight
Of Alpine ridges bleak. Plumptre.

UNSTRUCK. adj. Not premeditated;
not laboured.

In your conversation I could observe a certain of notion expressed in ready and unstruck words. Dryden.

UNSTRUCK. adj. Unfilled; not crowded.
Care keeps his watch in every old man's eye,
And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie
But where unbruted youth with unstruck brain
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign. Shakespeare.

UNSUBSTANTIAL. adj.

1. Not solid; not palpable.
Welcome, thou unsubstantial air that I embrace!
The worth that thou hast blown unto the world,
Owes nothing to thy breath. Shakespeare.

Darkness now rose,
As daylight sunk, and brought in lowering night,
Her shadowy offspring, unsubstantial both,
Privation mere of light and absent day. Milton.

2. Not real.

If empty unsubstantial beings may be ever made use of on this occasion, there were never any more nearly imagined and employed. Addison.

Hooker.

There is little hope for common justice in this dispute, from a man, who lays the foundations of his reasonings in so notorious an untruth. Atterbury.
UNUSABLE. adj. Unharmonious; not musical.

My news in dumb silence will I bury,
For they are harsh, untunable, and bad. Shaksp.
A lute-strung, merely unequal in its parts, giveth a harsh and untunable sound; which strings we call false. Bacon.

This harsh untunable pipe is no more fit than a raven's to join with the music of a choir. Tutler.
TO UNTUNE. v. a.

1. To make incapable of harmony.
Take but degree away, untune that string,
And hark what discord follows. Shakespeare.

When the last and dreadful hour
This rumbling pageant shall devour,
The trumpet shall be heard on high,
The dead shall live, the living die,
And music shall untune the sky. Dryden.

The captives, as their tyrant shall require That they should breathe the song, and touch the lyre.

Shall say; can Jacob's fervile race rejoin, Untune'd the music, and disu'd the voice? Prior.

2. To disorder.
O you kind gods!
Cure this great breach in his abused nature;
For untune'd and jarring senses O wind up
Of this child-changed father! Shakespeare.

UNTURNED. adj. Not turned.
New crimes invented, lest untune'd no stone,
To make my guilt appear, and hide his own.
Dryden.

So eager hath the inquisitive part of mankind been to bring this matter to a fair issue, that no stone hath been left untuned, no way whereby these things could have been brought forth of the sea, but one or other hath pitched upon.
Woodward.

UNTAUGHT. adj. Uninstructed; un-
taught.

Thy mother took into her blunnet bed
Some stern untutor'd churl, and noble stock
Was graft with crab-tree slip, whose fruit thou art
Shakespeare.

Thy even thoughts with so much plainness flow,
Thou seem'st untutor'd infancy may know:
Yet to such height is all that plainness wrought,
We may admire, and letter'd pride be taught.
Prior.

TO UNTWINE. v. a.

1. To open what is held together by convolution.

But since the filers did so soon untwine
Solar a thread, I'll strive to piece the line.
Waller.

2. To open what is wrapped on itself.
It turns finely and softly three or four turns, caulk'd by the untwining of the beard by the monk-ton. Bacon.

3. To separate that which clasps round any thing.

Divers worthy gentlemen of England, all the sweet songs of Italy could never untwine from the chain of God's word. Afham.

TO UNTWIST. v. a. To separate any things involved in each other, or wrapped up on themselves.

Untwisting his deceitful clew,
He gan to weave a web of wicked guile. Spenser.
The interest of prince and people is so enfolded in a mutual embrace, that they cannot be untwisted without pulling a limb off. Taylor.

Untwisting all the chains that tie
The hidden soul of harmony. Milton.

UNV

No, I'll untwist you;
I have occasion for your stay on earth. Dryden.
Tared hempen ropes cut small and untwisted, are beneficial for lands. Mortimer.

Untwist a wire, and from her gums
A set of teeth completely comes. Swift.
TO UNVAIL. v. a. [See UNTIE.] To loose.

O time! thou must untangle this, not I:
It is too hard a knot for me t' untie. Shakespeare.
Unlac'd her flays, her night-gown is untwist'd,
And what she has of head-dress is aside. Young.

TO UNVAIL. v. a. To uncover; to strip of a veil. This word is unvail, or unveil, according to its etymology. See VALE, and VEIL.

Troy reviv'd, her mourning face unvail'd.
Denham.

UNVALUABLE. adj. Inestimable; being above price.

Secure the innocence of children, by imparting to them the invaluable blessing of a virtuous and pious education. Atterbury.

UNVALUED. adj.

1. Not prized; neglected.
He may not, as unvalued persons do,
Carve for himself; for on his choice depend
The safety and the health of the whole state.
Shakespeare.

2. Inestimable; above price.
I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels. Shakespeare.

UNVANQUISHED. adj. Not conquered;
not overcome.

Shall I for laurel of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but viceroy of the whole? Shaksp.
Victory doth more often fall by error of the unvanquish'd, than by the valour of the victorious.
Hagyard.

They rise unvanquish'd. Milton.

UNVARIABLE. adj. [invariable, French.]
Not changeable; not mutable.

The two great hinges of morality stand fixt and unvariable as the two poles: whatever is naturally conducive to the common interest, is good, and what ever has a contrary influence is evil. Acorns.

UNVARIED. adj. Not changed; not diversified.

If authors cannot be prevailed with to keep close to truth and instruction, by unvaried terms, and plain, unphilosophical arguments, yet it concerns readers not to be imposed on. Locke.

They run round the same unvaried chimes,
With foretold tunes of still expected rhymes. Pope.

UNVARNISHED. adj.

1. Not overlaid with varnish.

I will a round, unvarnish'd tale deliver,
Of my whole course of love, what dresses, what chairs. Shakespeare.

2. Not adorned; not decorated.

I was his daughter with
UNVARYING. adj. Not liable to change.

We cannot keep by us any thing long, and every man, of duration, who has admits in a constant flux, and is subject to certain lengths of extension, as riches marked out in permanent parcels of matter. Locke.

TO UNVEIL. v. a. [See VEIL and UNVAIL.]

1. To uncover; to divert of a veil.

The moon,
Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerless light. Milton.

To the limpid stream direct thy way,
When the gay morn'ning heralds her fading ray. Pope.

2. To disclose; to show.

The providence, that's in a watchful state,
Knows almost every grain of Plato's seed;
Does ev'n our thoughts unveil in their dumb cradles. Shakespeare.

Now unveil'd, the toilet stands unveil'd,
Each silver vase in my tick order laid. Pope.

UNVEILEDLY. adv. Plainly; without disguise.

UNU

Not knowing what use you will make of what has been unweildly communicated to you, I was unwilling that some things, which had cost me pains, should fall into any man's hands that seems to purchase knowledge with pains. Boyle.

UNVENTILATED. adj. Not fanned by the wind.

This, animals, to succour life, demand;
Nor should the air unventilated stand;
The hot deep corrupted would contain Blue deaths. Blackmore.

UNVERITABLE. adj. Not true.

All these preceded upon unvertitable grounds.
Brown.

UNVERSED. adj. Unacquainted; unskilled.

Not eastern monarchs, on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple thine to gay
As the bright natives of the unlabour'd field
Unvers'd in ploughing, and unknown to till'd. Blackmore.

UNVEXED. adj. Untroubled; undisturbed.

With a blest and unvexed retire,
With unback'd swords, and unbent arms unvex'd,
We will bear home that lusty blood again. Shakespeare.

Unvex'd with thought of wants which may be told,
Or for to-morrow's dinner to provide. Dryden.

UNVIOLEATED. adj. Not injured; not broken.

Herein you war against your reputation,
And draw within the compass of suspect
The unviolated honour of your wife. Shakespeare.

He, with singular constancy, preserved his duty and fidelity to his majesty unviolated. Clarendon.

This strength diffus'd
No less through all my sinews, joints, and bones,
Than thine, while I prefer'd these locks unshorn,
The pledge of my unviolated vow. Milton.

UNVIRTUOUS. adj. Wanting virtue.

If they can find in their hearts that the poor, un-virtuous, fat knight shall be any further afflicted, we two will be the sufferers. Shakespeare.

UNVISITED. adj. Not resorted to.

In some wild zone
Dwell, not unvisited of heav'n's far light, Secure. Milton.

The playhouse and the park unvisited must lie.
Dryden.

UNUNIFORM. adj. Wanting uniformity.

Such an ununiform party is in many to exactly apportioned to Satan's interest, that he has no cause to wish the change of his nature. Deacon of Paty.

UNVOYAGEABLE. adj. Not to be passed over or voyaged.

Not this unvoyageable gulph obscure,
Dream from following thy illud non track. Milton.

UNWRIT D. adj. Not merited, not prest'd.

The time was once, when then unwrit'd wouldst
vow,

That never words were music to thine ear,
Unle I spoke. Shakespeare.

UNWRIT D. adj.

1. Not put to use; unemployed.

She whole husband about that time died, forgetting the absent Pliny, or, at least, not hoping of him to attain so stirring a purpose, lest he art un-writ, which might keep the line from breaking, where the fat was already taken. Shakespeare.

Looking before and after, eyes to not
That cupidity and postlike reason,
To rest in ununwrit. Shakespeare.

2. Not accustomed.

I, unaccustomed to such entertainment, did shortly and plainly answer what he was. Shakespeare.

Oh, whole eyes,
Albeit unwrit to the melting mood,
Dropt tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakespeare.

What art thou?

Not from above; no, thy wan looks betray Dim unlit light, and eyes unlit to day. Dryden.

UNUSEFUL. adj. Useless; serving no purpose.

U N W

I was persuaded, by experience, that it might not be unwifful in the capacities it was intended for. Granville.

Birds flutter with their wings, when there is but a little down upon them, and they are as yet utterly unwifful for flying. More.

As when the building gains a surer fluy,
We take the unwifful scaffolding away. Dryden.

Declining, not unwifful to his lord. Philips.
UNUSUAL. adj. Not common; not frequent; rare.

With this unusual and strange course they went on, till God, in whole heav'n's worldly judgments, I nothing doubt but that the re may be hidden mercy, gave them over to their own vicious. Hobbs.
You gain your point, if your inducement at
Can make unusual words easy and plain. Rojammon.

A sprightly red vermilion all her face,
And her eyes lanch with unusual grace. Granville.

That peculiar turn, that the words shall appear new, yet not unusual, but very proper to his auditors. Felton.

The river flows redundant, and attacks
The lingering remnant with unusual tide. Philips.
UNUSUALNESS. n. f. Uncommonness; infrequency.

It is the unusualness of the time, not the appearance, that inspires Almon's. Bacon.
UNUSUALLY. adv. [from unusual] Not in the usual manner.

UNUTTERABLE. adj. Ineffable; inexpressible.

Sighs now breath'd
Unutterable; which the spirit of prayer
Inspir'd, and whig'd for heaven with speedier flight
Than loudest raptory. Milton.

What think's he of the happiness of another life, wherein God will fill us with unutterable joy? Kettlewell.

It wounds my soul
To think of your unutterable sorrows,
When you shall find Hippolytus was guiltless. Smith.

UNVULNERABLE. adj. Exempt from wound; not vulnerable.

The god of toblers inform Thy thoughts with nobleness, that thou may'st prove
To flame unvulnerable, and tick t' the wars
Like a great f' a mark, standing every blow. Shakespeare.

UNWA'KINGED. adj. Not roused from sleep.

His wonder was, to find unwak'd Eve
With restless discompos'd. Milton.

And therefore must unwillingly lay waste
That country, which would else die but maintain. Dryden.

UNWILLINGNESS, n. f. Loathness; disinclination.

Obduracy, with professed unwillingness to obey, is no better than manifest disobedience. Hooker.

What moved the man to yield to her persuasions? Even the same cause that hath moved men to an unwillingness to give her, and to her sad, left she should pine, and be overcome with sorrow. Raleigh.

I live with what unwillingness
You lay upon me this command, and through your fears
Discern your love, and therefore must obey you. Denham.

There is in most people a reluctance and unwill- ingness to be forgotten. We observe, even among the vulgar, how loath they are to have an interruption over their grave. Swift.

To UNWILT, v. a. pret. and past. passive unwilted.

U N W

1. To separate any thing convolved; to untwist; to untwine.

All his subjects having by some years learned to hope for good and fear harm, only from her, that it should have in itself a stronger virtue than his, to have unwound to deeply an entered vice. Sidney.

Empirick politicians use decent
You boldly shew that skill which they pretend,
And work by means as noble as your end;
Which should you veil, we might unwind the clue,
As men do mist, till we come to you. Douglas.

2. To disentangle; to loose from entanglement.

Belong to serve God as they ought, but being not so skilful as in every point to unwind themselves where the traces of gloomy teach he to runtangle them, as in mind not a little troubled, when they hear to better themselves against that, which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy.
Hooker.

As you unwind her love from him,
Left it should unravel, and be good to none,
Bottom it on me. Shakespeare.

To UNWIND, v. a. To admit evolution.

Put the bottoms into clean furling water, and they will easily unwind. Motmore.

UNWIPED, adj. Not cleaned by rubbing.

Their hands and faces were all unwip'd with blood,
So were their diggers, which unwip'd we found.
Upon their pillows. Shakespeare.

UNWISD, adj. Weak; defective in wisdom.

O good, but most unwise patricians! why,
You grive, but reckon toators, have you thus Giv'n Hydra here to chafe an officer? Shakespeare.

Be not taken tardy by unwise delay. Shakespeare.

He who of those delights can judge, and spare
To interpolate them oft, is not unwise. Milton.

Thus the Greeks say, this the barbarians; the wife and the unwise. Tillotson.

When kings grow stubborn, foolish, or unwise,
Each private man for public good should rise. Dryden.

When the balance of power is duly fix'd in a state, nothing is more dangerous or unwise, than to give way to the first its popular encroachments.
Swift.

UNWISELY, adv. Weakly; not prudently;
not wisely.

Lady Zelmane, like some, unwisely liberal, that more delight to give pretents than pay debts, chose rather to bestow her love upon me, than to recompense him. Sidney.

Unwisely we the wiser East Pity, supposing them oppress'd
With tyrant's force. Waller.

To UNWISH, v. a. To wish that which is, not to be.

My love, would you and I alone,
Without more help, could fight this royal battle.—
—Why now thou hast unwish'd five thousand men; Shakespeare.

Which likes me better than to wish us one.

To desire there were no God, were plainly to un- wish their own being, which must be annihilated in the subtraction of that essence, which substantially supporteth them. Bacon.

UNWISHED, adj. Not fought; not desired.

So jealous is she of my love to her daughter, that I never yet begun to open my mouth to the uncertain Philotas, but that her unwished preference gave my tale a conclusion, before it had a beginning. Sidney.

To his unwished yoke
My soul consents not to give lov'reignty. Shakespeare.

While heaping unwish'd wealth I distant roam,
The best of brothers at his natal home,
By the dire fury of a traitress wife,
Ends the sad evening of a stormy life. Pope.

UNWISIT, adj. Unthought of; not known.

To UNWIT, v. a. To deprive of understanding. Not used.

Friend all but now; even now
In quarters, and in terms like bride and groom
Dressing them for bed; and then but now,
As if some planet had unwitting men,
Swords out, and tilting one at other's breasts.

Shakespeare

UNWITHDRAWING. adj. Continually liberal.

When first did Nature pour her humours forth,
With such a full and unwithdrawing hand,
Covering the earth with odours, fruits, and flocks?

Milton

UNWITHSTOOD. adj. Not opposed.

Crisply plains,
And Agamemnon, deep ting'd with blood, confess
What the Sibyls' vigour unwithstood
Could do in rigid fight.

Philips

UNWITNESSED. adj. Wanting testimony, wanting notice.

Let their zeal to the cause should any way be unwitnessed.

Hooker

UNWITTINGLY. adv. [Properly unwittingly, from unwitting.] Without knowledge; without consciousness.

In these fatal things it falls out that the high-working powers make second causes unwittingly accolly to their determinations.

Sidney

These things are termed most properly natural agents, which keep the law of their kind unwittingly, as the heavens and elements of the world which can do no other with than they do.

Hooker

Atheists upbraid all title to heaven, merely for present pleasure; besides the extreme madness of running such a desperate hazard after death, they unwittingly deprive themselves here of that tranquillity they seek for.

UNWONTED. adj.

1. Uncommon; unusual; rare; infrequent.

His sad, dull eyes, sunk deep in hollow pits,
Could not endure the unwanted him to view.

Spenser

My father's of a better nature

Than he appears by speech, this is unwanted

Shakespeare

Which now came from him.

Glanville

Every unwanted meteor is portentous, and some divine prognostick.

Glanville

Thick breath, quick pulse, and heaving of my heart.

All signs of some unwanted change appear.

Dryden

2. Unaccustomed; unused.

Philoclea, who blessing, and wiled smiling, making shamefacedness pleasant, and pleasure shamefaced, tenderly moved her feet, unwanted to feel the naked ground.

Sidney

Sea calves unwanted to fresh waters fly.

May

On faith and changed gods complain; and seas,
Rough with black winds and storms,

Milton

Unwanted shall admire.

UNWORKING. adj. Living without labour.

Lazy and unworking slothkeepers in this being worse than gamblers, do not only keep to match the money of a country in their hands, but make the public pay them for it.

Locke

UNWORSHIPPED. adj. Not adored.

He resolv'd to leave
Unworshipp'd, moody'd, the throne supreme.

Milton

UNWORTHILY. adv. Not according to desert; either above or below merit.

I vow'd, bate knight,
To tear the garter from thy craven leg.

Shakespeare

Which I have done, because unworthily.

Thou wast installed.

Shakespeare

Fearing lest my jealous aim might err,
And to unworthily disgrace the ear,

Shakespeare

I gave him gentle looks.

Shakespeare

If we look upon the Odyssey as a fiction, we consider it unworthily. It ought to be read as a story founded upon truth, adorned with embellishments of poetry.

Brown

UNWORTHINESS. n. f. Want of worth; want of merit.

A mind fearing the unworthiness of every word
that should be presented to her ears, at length brought it forth in this manner.

Sidney

O let not an excellent spirit do itself such wrong,
as to think where it is placed, embraced, and loved, there can be any unworthiness; since the weakest soul is not easier driven away by the sun, than that is chased away with too high thoughts.

Sidney

Every night he comes with songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: it nothing leads us
To clude him from our eaves, for he persists.

Shakespeare

I fear'd to find you in another place;
But since you're here, my jealousy grows less.

Dryden

You will be kind to my unworthiness.

Dryden

Have a true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, which will not suffer you to rise to a confidence unwarrantably pretended to by some.

Wake

UNWORTHY. adj.

1. Not deserving; whether good or bad.

The Athanasian creed and dogology should remain in note; the one as a most divine explication of the chiefest articles of our christian belief; the other as an heavenly acclamation of joyful applause to his piety, in whom we believe: neither the one nor the other unworthy to be heard founding, as they are in the church of Christ.

Hooker

Every particular accident, not unworthy the remembrance, for brevity I wittingly pass over.

Kneller

2. Wanting merit.

Degree being vizarded,
Th' unworthy thews as fairly in the mask

Shakespeare

So may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miss that which one unworthy may attain;

Shakespeare

And die with grieving

Shakespeare

Are there unworthy men chosen to offices?

Whitgift

3. Mean; worthless; contemptible.

Tell me, Philoclea, did you ever see such a shepherd? did you ever hear of such a prince? and then tell me if a small or unworthy assent have conquered me?

Sidney

4. Not suitable; not adequate.

I bid it her feet a work, which was unworthy
her, but which I hope she will forgive.

Dryden

Our friend's papers are in my hands, and I will take care to suppress things unworthy of him.

Pope to Swift

Care is taken to intersperse additions in such a manner, that scarce any book can be bought, without purchasing something unworthy of the author.

Swift

5. Unbecoming; vile.

The brutal action rous'd his manly mind:
Mov'd with unworthy usage of the maid,

Dryden

He, though unarm'd, resolv'd to give her aid.

Dryden

UNWOUND. pret. and part. pass. of un- wind. Untwined.

Thatchers tie with withs, but old pitched ropes
unwound are more lasting.

UNWOUNDED. adj.

1. Not wounded.

We may offend
Our yet unwounded enemies.

Milton

2. Not hurt.

Oh blest with temper!
She who can love a sister's charms, or hear
Sighs for a daughter with unwounded ear.

Pope

TO UNWRAPE. v. a. To open what is folded.

UNWREATH. v. a. To untwine.

The beads of wild oats, and of divers other wild plants, continually wreath and unwreath themselves, according to the temperature of the ambient air.

Boyle

UNWRITING. adj. Not assuming the character of an author.

The peace of the honest unwriting subject was daily molested.

Arbuthnot

UNWRITTEN. adj.

1. Not written; not conveyed by writing;
oral; traditional.

A rule of right unwritten, but delivered by tradition from one to another.

Spenser

The laws of England may be divided into the written law, and the unwritten.

2. Not containing writing.

As to his understanding, they bang him in road of all notion, a rule, unwritten blank, making him to be created as much an infant, as others are born.

UNWROUGHT. adj. Not laboured; not manufactured.

On prove at least to all of wiser thought,
Their hearts were fertile land, although unwrought.

Farmer

Yet thy moist clay is pliant to command,
Unwrought and easy to the potter's hand.

Now take the mold, now bend thy mind to feel
The first sharp motions of the forming wheel.

Dryden

UNWRUNG. adj. Not pinched.

We that have free souls, it touches us not, let the galled jade winch, our withers are unwrung.

Shakespeare

UNYIELDING. adj. Not given up.

O'erpower'd at length, they force him to the
ground,

Unyielding as he was, and to the pillar bound.

Dryden

TO UNYOKE. v. a.

1. To loose from the yoke.

Our army is dispers'd already:
Like youthful steers unyok'd, they took their course
East, west, north, south.

Homers calls them like gods, and yet gives them
the employment of slaves, they unyoke the mules.

Brown

2. To part; to disjoin.

Shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
So join'd in love, so strong in both,

Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret? Shall we

UNYOKED. adj.

1. Having never worn a yoke.

Se'ven bullocks yet unyok'd for Phœbus chariot,
And for Diana sev'n untapped ewes.

Dryden

2. Licentious; unrestrained.

I will awhile uphold
The unyok'd humour of your idleness.

UNYOKED. adj. Not bound with a yoke.

Eady her motion seem'd, serene her air,
Full, though unyok'd her bosom.

Pope

VOCABULARY. n. f. [vocabularium, Lat.
vocabulaire, French.] A dictionary, a lexicon; a wordbook.

Some have delivered the polity of spirits, and that they stand in awe of conjurations, which is unity nothing, not only in the dictionary of words
but in the subtler vocabulary of Satan.

Among other books, we should be furnished with
vocabularies and dictionaries of several sorts.

VOCAL. adj. [vocal, French; vocalis,
Latin.]

1. Having a voice.

Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues;
And there be words not made with lungs;

Sententious show'st! O let them fall!

Their cadence is rhetorical.

Witness if I be silent, morn or even,
To hill, or valley, fountain, or fresh shade,

Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise.

Milton

Smooth-sliding Miniclus, crown'd with reeds,
That strain I heard was of a higher mood.

None can animate the lyre,
And the mute strings with vocal souls inspire.

As Helen, in whole eyes ten thousand cupid dwell.

Dryden

Mennon, though stone, was counted vocal,
But 'twas the god, mean while, that spoke all.

Rome oft has heard a cross haranguing,
With prompting priest behind the hanging.

Prior

2. Uttered or modulated by the voice.

They which, under pretence of the law ceremonial being abrogated, require the abrogation of instrumental music, approving nevertheless the use of vocal melody to remain, must show some reason wherefore the one should be thought a less ceremony, and not the other.

Howe

They join'd their vocal worship to the choir
Of creatures waiting voice. Milton.

VOCALITY. n. f. [vocalitas, Latin; from vocal.] Power of utterance; quality of being utterable by the voice.

L and R being in extremes, one of roughness, the other of smoothness and freeness of vocality, are not easy in tract of vocal speech to be pronounced distinctly. Halder.

TO VOCALIZE. v. a. [from vocal.] To form into voice.

This is one thing to give an impulse to breath alone, another thing to vocalize that breath, i. e. in its passage through the larynx to give it the sound of human voice. Halder.

VOCALLY. adv. [from vocal.] In words; articulately.

Although it is as natural to mankind to express their desires vocally, as it is for brutes to use their natural vocal signs; yet the forming of languages into this or that fashion, is a business of institution. Hale.

VOCATION. n. f. [vocation, French; vocatio, Latin.]

1. Calling by the will of God.

Neither doth that which St. Paul, or other apostles, teach, enforce the utter disability of any other man's vocation thought requisite in this church for the saving of souls. Hooker.

They which thus were in God eternally by their intended admission to life, have, by vocation or adoption, God actually now in them. Hooker.

2. Summons.

What can be urged for them, who not having the vocation of poverty to scribble, out of mere wantonness make themselves ridiculous? Dryden.

3. Trade; employment; calling.

He would think his service greatly rewarded, if he might obtain by that means to live in the light of his prince, and yet practise his own chosen vocation. Sidney.

God's mother, in a vision full of majesty,
Would me to leave my base vocation. Shakspeare.

God has furnished men with faculties sufficient to direct them in the way they should take, if they will seriously employ them, when their ordinary vocations allow them the leisure. Locke.

4. It is used ironically in contempt.

But lest you should for honour take
The drunken quarrels of a rake,
Or when a whore in her vocation
Keeps punctual to an assignation. Swift.

VOCATIVE. n. f. [vocativus, French; vocativus, Latin.] The grammatical case used in calling or speaking to.

VOCIFERATION. n. f. [vociferatio, vociferio, Latin.] Clamour; outcry.

The lungs, kept too long upon the stretch by vociferation, or loud singing, may produce the same effect. Arbuthnot.

VOCIFEROUS. adj. [vocifero, Latin.] Clamorous; noisy.

Three three vociferous heralds rose to check the rout. Chapman.

Several templars, and others of the more vociferous kind of critics, went with a resolution to hiss, and outskilt they were forced to laugh. Pope.

VOGUE. n. f. [vogue, French; from voguer, to float, or fly at large.] Fashion; mode; popular reception.

It is not more absurd to undertake to tell the taste of an unknown person by his looks, than to such a man's faithfulness from the vogue of the world. South.

We may revive the obsoletest words,
And banish those that now are most in vogue. Roscommon.

What fashions th' have, and what they drive at
In public vogue, or what in private. Hudibras.
In the vogue of the world, it passes for an exploit of honour, for kings to run away with whole countries that they have no pretence to. L'Estrange.

No periodical writer, who always maintains his gravity, and does not sometimes sacrifice to the graces, must expect to keep in vogue for any time. Addison.

At one time they keep their patients to close and warm, as almost to stifle them, and all on a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker.

VOICE. n. f. [voir, French; vox, voxis, Latin.]

1. Sound emitted by the mouth.

I assay to see
The works of men, or heave mortalities
Expire a voice. Chapman.

2. Sound of the mouth, as distinguished from that uttered by another mouth.

Air in sounds that are not tones, which are all equal, admitteth much variety, as in the voices of living creatures, and in the voices of several men; for we can discern several men by their voices. Bacon.

3. Any sound made by breath.

O Marcus, I am warm'd, my heart
Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory. Addison.

4. Vote; suffrage; opinion expressed.

Are you all resolv'd to give your voices?
But that's no matter, the greater part carries it. Shakspeare.

I've no words;
My voice is in my word! thou bloodier villain—
Than terms can give thee out. Shakspeare.

The state was betrayed by the multitude and corruption of voices, and must shortly perish, if not committed to the grave judgment of some few, for two hundred gave voices, reducing that multitude to fifty, who, for their experience, were holden for men of great gravity. Knollys.

Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice
Of holy senates, and elect by voice. Dryden.

5. Language; words; expression.

Let us call on God in the voice of his church. Fell.

TO VOICE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rumour; to report. Out of use.
Is this th' Athenian manor, whom the world
Fanc'd to regardfully? Shakspeare.

It was voiced that the king purposed to put to death Edward Plantagenet, prisoner in the Tower, whereat there was great murmur. Bacon.

Many fought to feed
The early creditors of novelities,
By voicing him alive. Daniel.

2. To vote. Obsolete.

Your minds, pre-occupied with what
You rather must do, than what you should do,
Made you, against the gram, to voice him cruel. Shakspeare.

TO VOICE. v. n. To clamour; to make outcries. Obsolete.

Sur not questions of jurisdiction, and rather assume thy right in silence, than voice it with claims. Bacon.

It is not the gift of every person to harangue the multitude, to voice it loud and high. South.

VOICED. adj. [from the noun.] Furnished with a voice.

That's Erythra,
Or some angel voic'd like her. 'Tis she! my struggling soul
Would fain go out to meet and welcome her! Dennis.

VOID. adj. [void, French.]

1. Empty; vacant.

The earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep. Genesis.
I'll get me to a place more void, and there
Speak to great Cæsar as he comes along. Shakspeare.

2. Vain; ineffectual; null; vacated.

If it be void, and to no purpose, that the names of men are so frequent in their books, what did move them to bring them in? Hooker.

My word shall not return void, but accomplish that which I please. Isaiah.

This custom made their whole government void, as an engine built against human society, worthy to be fired and pulled down. Bacon.

Though the wisdom of a future parliament may find cause to declare this or that act of parliament void, yet there will be the same temper requisite to repeal it. Clarendon.

The two houses declared, that nothing which should from that time pass under the great seal, should be good and valid, but void and null. Clarendon.

Some kind of subjection is due from every man to every man, which cannot be made void by any power whatsoever. Sage.

3. Unsupplied; unoccupied.

Queen Elizabeth, importuned much to supply divers great offices that had been long void, answered nothing to the matter, but rose up on the sudden, and said, I am sure my office will not be long void. Camden.

4. Wanting; unfurnished; empty.

If some be admitted into the ministry, void of learning, or few in life, are all the rest to be condemned? Whitgift.

How void of reason are our hopes and fears!
Dreaden.

Being void of all friendship and enmity, they never complain. Sage.

5. Unsubstantial; unreal.

Sinners, hypocrites, void and vain. Pope.

VOID. n. f. [from the adjective.] An empty space; vacuum; vacancy.

Pride, where wit fails, steeps us our defence,
And fills up all the mighty void of sense. Pope.

With what power
Were first th' unwieldy planets launch'd along
Th' illustrious void? Thomson.

TO VOID. v. a. [from the adjective; vulgar, French.]

1. To quit; to leave empty.

If they will fight with us, bid them come down,
Or void the field. Shakspeare.

Towards this passage, somewhat darker than the chamber which he voided, this assassin gave him, with a back blow, a deep wound into his left side. Wotton.

2. To emit; to pour out.

The ascending water is vented by fits, every convolution voiding only so much as is contained in one helix. Wilkins.

3. To emit as excrement.

Excrements incline all to the same creature that voideth them, and the cat burieth what he voideth. Bacon.

Believ'd the heavens were made of stone,
Because the sun had voided one. Hudibras.

Healthy blennorrhæ, or matter voided by urine, are suspicious symptoms of a stone in the kidneys, especially if the patient has been subject to voiding of gravel. Arbuthnot.

4. To vacate; to nullify; to annul.

It was become a practice, upon any specious pretence, to void the security that was at any time given for money so borrowed. Clarendon.

TO VOID. v. n.

1. To be emitted.

By the use of emulsions, and frequent emollient injections, his urine voided more easily. Hoffmann.

2. To receive what is emitted.

How in our voiding lobby hall thou stood,
And duly waited for my coming forth? Shakspeare.

VOIDABLE. adj. [from void.] Such as may be annulled.

If the metropolitan, pretending the party deceased had been intubatus in divers dioceses, granted letters of administration, such administration is not void, but voidable by a sentence. Ayliffe.

VOIDANCE. n. f. [from void.]

1. The act of emptying.

2. Ejection from a benefice.

VOIDER. n. f. [from void.] A basket, in which broken meat is carried from the table.

A voider for the nonce,
I wrong the devil should I pick their bones. Clarendon.

VOIDNESS. n. f. [from void.]

Rough with black winds and storms,
Unworted shall admire.

UNWORKING, adj. Living without labour.

Laws and unworking slothkeepers in this being wre than parasites, do not only keep to such of the money of a country in their hands, but make the publick pay them for it.

UNWORSHIPPED, adj. Not adored.

He refus'd to love
Unworshipp'd, unobey'd, the throne supreme.

UNWORTHILY, adv. Not according to desert; either above or below merit.

I vow'd, base knight,
To tear the garter from thy craven leg,
Which I have done, because unworthily.

Thou wast insulted.
Fearing lest my jealous aim might err,
And to unworthily disgrace the man,
I gave him gentle looks.

If we look upon the Odyssey as all a fiction, we consider it unworthily. It ought to be read as a story founded upon truth, adorned with embellishments or poetry.

UNWORTHINESS, n. f. Want of worth; want of merit.

A mind fearing the unworthiness of every word
that should be presented to her ears, at length brought it forth in this manner.

U N W

O let not an excellent spirit do itself such wrong,
as to think where it is placed, embraced, and
loved, there can be any unworthiness; since the workest mit is not easilier driven away by the sun, than that is chaf'd away with so high thoughts.

Every night he comes with songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: it nothing teads us
To chide him from our eaves, for he persists.

I fear'd to find you in another place;
But since you're here, my jealousy grows less:
You will be kind to my unworthiness.

Have a true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, which will not suffer you to rise to a confidence unwarrantably pretended to by some.

UNWORTHY, adj.

1. Not deserving; whether good or bad.

The Athanasian creed and dogmology should remain mute; the one as a most divine explication of the choicest articles of our christian belief; the other as an heavenly acclamation of joyful applause to his praises, in whom we believe: neither the one nor the other unworthy to be heard founding, as they are in the church of Christ.

2. Wanting merit.

Deceit being vizarded,
Th' unworthiest shews as fairly in the mask.

So may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miss that which one unworthier may attain;
And die with grieving
Are there unworthy men chosen to offices?

3. Mean; worthless; contemptible.

Tell me, Philocles, did you ever see such a shepherd? did you ever hear of such a prince? and then tell me if a small or unworthy assault have conquered me?

4. Not suitable; not adequate.

I laid at her feet a work, which was unworthy
her, but which I hope she will forgive.
Our friend's papers are in my hands, and I will take care to suppress things unworthy of him.

Care is taken to interperse additions in such a manner, that scarce any book can be bought, without purchasing something unworthy of the author.

5. Unbecoming; vile.

The brutal action rous'd his manly mind:
Mov'd with unworthy usage of the mind,
He, though maim'd, resolv'd to give her aid.

UNWORTH, pret. and part. pass. of unwind. Untwisted.

Thatchers tie with withs, but old pitched ropes
unwound are more lasting.

UNWORTHED, adj.

1. Not wounded.

Our yet unwounded enemies.

2. Not hurt.

Oh blest with temper!
She who can love a sister's chums, or hear
Sighs for a daughter with unwounded ear.

TO UNWRAPE, v. a. To open what is folded.

UNWRATH, v. a. To untwine.

The beards of wild oats, and of divers other wild plants, continually wreath and unwrath themselves, according to the temperature of the ambient
air.

UNWRITING, adj. Not assuming the
character of an author.

The peace of the honest unwriting subject was
daily molested.

1. Not written; not conveyed by writing;

A rule of right unwritten, but delivered by tradition from one to another.

V O C

The laws of England may be divided into the written law, and the unwritten.

2. Not containing writing.

As to his understanding, they bring him in void of all notion, a rude, unwritten blank; making him to be created as much an infant, as others are born.

UNWROUGHT, adj. Not laboured; not manufactured.

Or prove at least to all of wiser thought,
Their hearts were fertile land, although unwrought.

Yet thy moist clay is pliant to command;
Unwrought and easy to the potter's hand;
Now take the mold, now bend thy mind to feel
The first sharp motions of the forming wheel.

UNWRUNG, adj. Not pinched.

We that have free souls, it touches us not, let the galled jade wince, our withers are unwring.

UNYIELDED, adj. Not given up.

O'erpower'd at length, they force him to the
ground,
Unyielded as he was, and to the pillar bound.

TO UNYOKE, v. a.

1. To loose from the yoke.

Our army is dispers'd already:
Like youthful steers unyok'd, they took their course
East, west, north, south.

Homer calls them like gods, and yet gives us
the employment of slaves; they unyoke the mules.

2. To part; to disjoin.

Shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
So join'd in love, so strong in both,
Unyoke this seizure, and thus unyoke regret?

UNYOKED, adj.

1. Having never worn a yoke.
Seven bullocks yet unyok'd for Phœbus chariot,
And for Diana ten unspotted ewes.

2. Licentious; unrestrained.

I will awhile uphold
The unyok'd humour of your ill-ness.

UNYOKED, adj. Not bound with a gad.

Early her motion seem'd, serene her air,
Full, though unyok'd her bosom.

VOCABULARY, n. f. [vocabularium, Lat.
vocabulaire, French.] A dictionary; a lexicon; a wordbook.

Some have delivered the polity of spirits, and that they stand in awe of conjurations, which is nearly nothing, not only in the dictionary of words, but in the subtiler vocabulary of Satan.

Among other books, we should be furnished with
vocabularies and dictionaries of several sorts.

VOCAL, adj. [vocal, French; vocalis,
Latin.]

1. Having a voice.

Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues;
And there be words not made with lungs,
Sententious shows! O let them fall!

Their cadence is rhetorical.

Victuals if I be silent, worn or even,
To hill, or valley, fountain, or fresh shade,
Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise.

Smooth-sliding Mincius, crown'd with reed
reeds,

That strain I heard was of a higher mood.

None can animate the lyre,
And the mute strings with vocal souls inspire.

As Helen, in whose eyes ten thousand captives dwelt.

Mennon, though stone, was counted vocal;
But 'twas the god, mean while, that spoke all.

Rome oft has heard a cross haranguing,
With prompting priest behind the hauging.

2. Uttered or modulated by the voice.

They which, under pretence of the law ceremonial being abrogated, require the abrogation of instrumental music, approving nevertheless the use of vocal melody to remain, must show some reason wherefore the one should be thought a legal ceremony, and not the other.

They join'd their vocal worship to the choir
Of creatures wanting voice. Milton.

VOCALITY. n. f. [vocalitas, Latin; from vocal.] Power of utterance; quality of being utterable by the voice.

L and R being in extremes, one of roughness, the other of smoothness and freeness of vocalty, are not only in tract of vocal speech to be pronounced partially. Holder.

To VOCALIZE. v. a. [from vocal.] To form into voice.

It is one thing to give an impulse to breath alone, another thing to vocalize that breath, i. e. in its passage through the larynx to give it the sound of human voice. Holder.

VOCALLY. adv. [from vocal.] In words; articulately.

Although it is as natural to mankind to express their desires vocally, as it is for brutes to use their natural vocal figures; yet the forming of languages into this or that fashion, is a business of imitation. Hale.

VOCATION. n. f. [vocation, French; vocatio, Latin.]

1. Calling by the will of God.

Neither doth that which St. Paul, or other apostles, teach, enforce the utter disability of any other men's vocation thought requisite in this church for the saving of souls. Hooker.

They which thus were in God eternally by their intended admission to life, have, by vocation or adoption, God actually now in them. Hooker.

2. Summons.

What can be urged for them, who not having the vocation of poverty to scribble, out of meer wantonness make themselves ridiculous? Dryden.

3. Trade; employment; calling.

He would think his service greatly rewarded, if he might obtain by that means to live in the light of his prince, and yet practise his own chosen vocation. Sidney.

God's mother, in a vision full of majesty, Will'd me to leave my base vocation. Shakspeare.

God has furnished men with faculties sufficient to direct them in the way they should take, if they will seriously employ them, when their ordinary reasons allow them the leisure. Locke.

4. It is used ironically in contempt.

But lest you should for honour take the drunken quarrels of a rake, Or when a whore in her vocation Keeps punctual to an assignation. Swift.

VOCIFEROUS. adj. [vocifero, Latin.] Clamorous; noisy.

Three three vociferous heralds rose to check the rout. Chapman.

Several templars, and others of the more vociferous kind of critics, went with a resolution to hiss, and confound if they were forced to laugh. Pope.

VOGUE. n. f. [vogue, French; from voguer, to float, or fly at large.] Fashion; mode; popular reception.

It is not more absurd to undertake to tell the name of an unknown person by his looks, than to wish a man's friendship from the vogue of the world. South.

We may revive the obsolete words,

And banish those that now are most in vogue. Roscommon.

What factions th' have, and what they drive at in public vogue, or what in private. Hudibras.

In the vogue of the world, it passes for an exploit of honour, for kings to run away with whole countries that they have no pretence to. L'Estrange.

VOL. II.

No periodical writer, who always maintains his gravity, and does not sometimes sacrifice to the graces, must expect to keep in vogue for any time. Addison.

At one time they keep their patients so close and warm, as almost to suffocate them, and all on a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker.

VOICE. n. f. [voix, French; vox, voxis, Latin.]

1. Sound emitted by the mouth.

I assay to see
The works of men, or heave mortalities
Expire a voice. Chapman.

2. Sound of the mouth, as distinguished from that uttered by another mouth.

Air in sounds that are not tones, which are all equal, admitteth much variety, as in the voices of living creatures, and in the voices of several men; for we can discern several men by their voices. Bacon.

3. Any sound made by breath.

O Marcus, I am warn'd, my heart
Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory. Addison.

4. Vote; suffrage; opinion expressed.

Are you all resolv'd to give your voices?
But that's no matter, the greater part carries it. Shakspeare.

I've no words;
My voice is in my sword! thou bloodier villain
Than terms can give thee out. Shakspeare.

The state was betrayed by the multitude and corruption of voices, and must shortly perish, if not committed to the grave judgment of some few, for two hundred gave voices, reducing that multitude to fifty, who, for their experience, were holden for men of greatest gravity. Knollys.

Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice
Of holy features, and elect by voice. Dryden.

5. Language; words; expression.

Let us call on God in the voice of his church. Fell.

Your minds, pre-occupied with what
You rather must do, than what you should do,
Made you, against the grain, to voice him counsel. Shakspeare.

To VOICE. v. n. To clamour; to make outcries. Obsolete.

Stir not questions of jurisdiction, and rather assume thy right in silence, than voice it with claims. Bacon.

It is not the gift of every person to harangue the multitude, to voice it loud and high. South.

VOICED. adj. [from the noun] Furnished with a voice.

That's Erythra,
Or some angel voic'd like her. 'Tis she! my struggling soul
Would fain go out to meet and welcome her! Dennis.

VOID. adj. [vide, French.]

1. Empty; vacant.

The earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep. Genesis.

I'll get me to a place more void, and there
Speak to great Caesar as he comes along. Shakspeare.

2. Vain; ineffectual; null; vacated.

If it be void, and to no purpose, that the names of men are so frequent in their books, what did more them to bring them in? Hooker.

My word shall not retain void, but accomplish that which I please. Shakspeare.

This custom made their whole government void, as an engine built against human society, worthy to be fired and pulled down. Bacon.

Though the wisdom of a future parliament may find cause to declare this or that act of parliament void, yet there will be the same temper requisite to repeal it. Clarendon.

The two houses declared, that nothing which should from that time pass under the great seal, should be good and valid, but void and null. Clarendon.

Some kind of subjection is due from every man to every man, which cannot be made void by any power whatsoever. Sayl.

3. Unsupplied; unoccupied.

Queen Elizabeth, importuned much to supply divers great offices that had been long void, answered nothing to the matter, but rose up on the sudden, and said, I am sure my office will not be long void. Camden.

4. Wanting; unfurnished; empty.

If thou be advanced into the ministry, void of leaven, &c. or lewd in life, are all the rest to be condemned? Whitgift.

How void of reason are our hopes and fears! Dodd.

Being void of all friendship and civility, they never complain. Swift.

5. Unsubstantial; unreal.

Sensels, intellects void, void and vain. Pope.

VOID. n. f. [from the adjective.] An empty space; vacuum; vacancy.

Pride, where wit fails, steps in to our defence,
And fills up all the mighty void of sense. Pope.

With what power

1. Flying; passing through the air.

The caterpillar towards the end of summer waxeth volatile, and turneth into a butterfly. Bacon.

There is no creature only volatile, or no flying animal but hath feet as well as wings, because there is not sufficient food for them always in the air.

2. [volatile, French.] Having the power to pass off by spontaneous evaporation.

In van, though by their powder at thy hand Volatile Hermes.

When arsenick with sulphur exa regulus, and with mercury sublimates a volatile sulphide salt, like butter of antimony; doth not this show that arsenick, which is a substance totally volatile, is compounded of fixed and volatile parts, strongly cohering by a mutual attraction; in that the volatile will not ascend without carrying up the fixed?

3. Lively; nether; changeable of mind; full of spirit; airy.

Active spirits, whose ever skimming over the surface of things with a volatile temper, will fix nothing in their mind.

You are as giddy and volatile as ever, just like the reverend of Mr. Pope, who hath always loved a domestic life.

VOLATILE. n. f. [volatile, French.] A winged animal.

The air conveys the heat of the sun, maintains fires, and leaves for the flight of volatiles.

VOLATILITAS. n. f. [volatilité, Fr.]

VOLATILITAS. n. f. [from volatile.]

1. The quality of flying away by evaporation; not fixity.

Upon the compound body, chiefly observe the colour, fragility, or pliancy, the volatility or fixity, compared with simple bodies.

Of volatility the utmost degree is, when it will fly away without returning.

Heat conveys the spirits to search some issue out of the body, as in the volatility of metals.

The animal spirit cannot, by reason of their volatility and volatility, be discovered to the taste.

The volatility of mercury argues that they are not much together; nor may they be united, lest they lose their opacity.

There, with a voluble and suppliant tongue, come mere echoes.

4. Fluent of words. It is applied to the speech, or the speaker.

Came, a brave very voluble, no farther from, than in putting on the mean form of civil and humane seeming, for the better composing of his rude affection.

It is voluble and sharp discourse be married. Unkindness blunts it more than marble hard.

VOLUME. n. f. [volumen, Latin.]

1. Something rolled, or convolved.

2. As much as seems convolved at once, as a fold of a serpent, a wave of water.

Threefold and ten I can remember well, Within the volume of which time I've been.

Hours dreadful, and things strange, Unoppos'd they e'er their love their force, Or wind in volumes to their former course.

Behind the general mends his weary pace, And silently to his revenge he sails.

So glides some trodden serpent on the grass, And long behind his wounded volute trails.

Thames' fruitful tides

Flow through the vale in silver volumes play.

Lepton.

By the insinuations of these crystals, the volumes of air and heaven out of the watry particles, and many of them uniting, form larger volumes, which thereby have a greater force to expand themselves Cheyne.

3. [volume, French.] A book; so called, because books were anciently rolled upon a staff.

Gay on all this while his book did read,
He yet has ended; for it was a great

And ample volume, that doth far exceed

My leisure, so long leaves here to repeat. Spenser

'Calmy, I do beseech you.—

A e, as an boiler, that for the poorest piece

Will bear as the name by th' volume Shakespeare.

The most sagacious man is not able to find out any bit of error in this great volume of the world.

I shall not now enlarge on the wrong judgments whereby men mislead themselves. This would make a volume Locke.

It one short volume could comprize

All that was witty, learn'd and wise,

How would it be esteem'd and read? Suift.

VOL'UMINOUS. adj. [from volume.]

VOLUNTARILY. adv. [volontiers, French;

from voluntary.] Spontaneously; at one's own accord; without compulsion.

Sub there is no likelihood that ever voluntarily
they will seek instruction at our hands, it remaineth that unless we will suffer them to perish, salvation must seek them. Hooker.

To be agents voluntarily in our own destruction, against God and nature. Hooker.

Self preservation will oblige a man voluntarily, and by choice, to undergo any less evil, to secure himself but from the probability of an evil inconspicably greater. South.

VOLUNTARY. adj. [volontaire, Fr.

voluntarius, Latin.]

1. Acting without compulsion; acting by choice.

God did not work as a necessary, but a voluntary agent, intending before hand, and decreeing with deliberation, that which did outwardly proceed from him.

The lottery of my destiny
Ras me the right of voluntary choosing. Shakespeare.

2. Willing; acting with willingness.

1. A suture was no more; her guard away,
To hit a voluntary prey. Pope.

3. Done by design; purposed.

1. A man be opping a tree, and his ax-head fall to the beak, out of his hand, and kills another man, by here is indeed man-slaughter, but no murder. Perkins.

4. Done without compulsion.

The forbearance denotes the forbearance
in action, consequent to an order of the mind

The old duke is banished; the new duke, and the old lord leaving lords, have put themselves into voluntary exile with him. Shakespeare.

They must have recourse to abstinence, which is but voluntary fasting, and to exercise, which is but voluntary labour. Scid.

5. Acting of his own accord; spontaneous.

The public prayers of the people of God, in churches thoroughly settled, but never me to be voluntary duties, proceeding from any man's ex-temporal wit. Hooker.

Thoughts which voluntary move

Harmonious numbers. Milton.

VOLUNTARY. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A volunteer; one who engages in any affair of his own accord.

All the untitled humours of the land,

Rath, meconfid'rate, fiery volunteers. Shakespeare.

Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impulse. Shakespeare.

The hording wars were made altogether by voluntaries, upon their own head. Davies.

Aids came in partly upon mislives, and partly voluntaries from all parts. Bacon.

2. A piece of music played at will, without any settled rule.

Whistling winds like organs play'd,
Until their voluntaries made

The waken'd earth in odorous rise,

To be her morning sacrifice. Cleveland.

By a voluntary before the first lesson, we are prepared for admission of those divine truths, which we are shortly to receive Spectator.

VOLUNTEER. n. f. [volontaire, French.]

A soldier who enters into the service of his own accord.

Congreve, and the author of the Relapse, being the principals in the dispute, I satisfy them, as for the volunteers, they will find themselves affected with the misfortune of their friends. Collier.

All Asia now was by the ears;

And gods beat up for volunteers Prior

To Greece and Troy.—

To VOLUNTEER. v. n. To go for a soldier. A cant word.

Leave off the se wages, for in conference speaking,

The city needs not your new tricks for breaking

And if you fallants lose, to all appearing,

You'll want an equipage for volunteering. Dryden.

VOL'PTUARY. n. f. [voluptaire, Fr.

voluptuarius, Latin.] A man given up to pleasure and luxury.

Does not the voluptuary understand, in all the liberties of a loose and a lewd conversation, that he runs the risk of body and soul? L'Estrange.

The parasite was intended against the voluptu-aries, men who lived like heathens, dissolutely, without regarding any of the restraints of religion.

Atterbury.

VOLUPTUOUS. adj. [voluptuosus, Lat.

voluptuosus, French.] Given to excess of pleasure; luxurious.

He then deceives, deceiv'd in his deceit;

Made drunk with drugs of dear voluptuous receipt.

Spenser.

If a new sect have not two properties, it will not spread. The one is, the supplanting, or the opposing of authority established; the other is, the giving licence to pleasures, and a voluptuous life. Bacon.

Thou wilt bring me from

To that new world of light and bliss, among

The gods, who live at ease, where I shall reign

At thy right hand voluptuous, without end. Milton.

Then swol'n with pride, into the bare I fell

Of fair fallacious looks, a venereal train,

Soft'n'd with pleasure, and voluptuous life. Milton.

Speculative atheism admits only in our speculation, whereas really human nature cannot be guilty of the crime. Indeed a few sensual and voluptuous persons may for a season eclipse this native light of the soul, but can never wholly smother and extinguish it. Bentley.

VOLUPTUOUSLY. adv. [from voluptuous.]

Luxuriously; with indulgence of excelsive pleasure.

Had I a dozen sons, I had rather eleven died nobly for their country, than one voluptuously turteit out of action. Shakespeare.

This cannot be done, if my will be so worldly or temporally disposed, as never to interfere to think of them, but perpetually to carry away and apply
my mind to other things. South.

VOLUPTUOUSNESS. n. f. [from voluptuous.] Luxuriolousness; addictedness to excess of pleasure.

There's no bottom

In my voluptuousness, your wives, your daughters,

Your nation, and your minds, could not fill up

The excess of my lust. Shakespeare.

If he fill'd his vanity with his voluptuousness,

Full tarsens, and the dynmcs of his bones,

Call on him for it. Shakespeare.

Here, where full evening is, not noon nor night;

Where no voluptuousness, yet all delight. Dante.

These tons of Epicurus, the voluptuousness and irreligion, must pass for the only wits of the age.

You may be free, unless

Your other lord forbids voluptuousness. Dryden

VOLUTATION. n. f. [volutatio, Latin.]

Wallowing; rolling.

VOLUTE. n. f. [volute, French.] A member of a column.

That part of the capitals of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders, which is supposed to represent the back of trees twisted and turned into spiral lines, or, according to others, the head and neck of virgins in their long hair. According to Vitruvius, those that appear above the stems in the Corinthian order, are sixteen in every capital, four in the Ionick, and eight in the Composite. These volutes are more especially remarkable in the Ionick capital, representing a pillow or cushion laid between the abacus and column: whence that ancient architect calls the voluta pulviscus. Hart.

It is said there is an Ionick pillar in the Santa Maria Trinitaria, where the marks of the capitals are still to be seen on the volute; and that Palladio learned from thence the working of that difficult problem. Addison.

VOMICA. n. f. [Latin.] An encysted

tumour in the lungs.

When the ulcer is not broke, it is commonly called a vomica, attended with the true symptoms as an empyema, because the vomica communicating with the vessels of the lungs, must necessarily void some of the purid matter, and taint the blood.

Arbuthnot.

VOMICK NUT. n. f.

Vomick nut is the nucleus of a fruit of an East-

India tree, the wood of which is the lignum colu-mbum, or Indian wood of the shops. It is flat, compressed, and round, of the breadth of a fluting, and about the thickness of a crown piece. It is certainly potent to quench colds and hoarseness, and taken internally, in small doses, it distends the whole human frame, and brings on convulsions. Hill.

To VOMIT. v. n. [vomo, Lat.] To cast

up the contents of the stomach.

The dog, when he is sick at the stomach, knows his cure, falls to his guly, vomits, and is well.

More.

To VOMIT. v. a. [vomir, Fr.]

1. To throw up from the stomach: often with up or out.

As though some world unknown,

By pamp'rd nature's store too prodigally fed,

And vomiting therewith, her lutescent vomit.

Dryden.

The sick vomited out loath upon the dry land.

Job.

Vomiting is of life, when the contents of the stomach require it. Boerhaave.

Weak stomachs vomit up the wine that they drink in too great quantity, with the ferment of sugar.

Boerhaave.

2. To throw up with violence from any hollow.

VOMIT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The matter thrown up from the stomach.

He cast up his words with his hands devoutly,

Like vomit from his nostrils, entirely purged.

South.

VOT

2. An emetick medicine; a medicine that causes vomits.

This vomit may be repeated often, if it be found to be useful. Markness
Whether a vomit may be safely given, must be judged by the circumstances; if there be any symptoms of an inflammation on the stomach, a vomit is extremely dangerous. Arbuthnot

VOMITION. n. f. [from vomere, Lat.] The act or power of vomiting.

How many have saved their lives, by spewing up their debauch? Whereas, if the stomach had wanted the faculty of vomition, they had inevitably died. Grew

VOMITIVE. adj. [from vomitus, Fr.] Emetick; causing vomits.

From the vitriolous quality, mercurius dulcis, and vitriol vomitive, occasion black ejaculations. Brown

VOMITORY. adj. [from vomere, Fr. vomitarius, Lat.] Procting vomits; emetick.

Since regimens of Abdomen, or glands of intemperance, will communicate to water or wine a purging or vomitory operation, yet the body itself, after iterated infusions, abates, or vomits or weight. Brown

Some have vomited up such bodies as these, namely, thick, dark, bloody pus, which, by framing, they vomit again, or by taking vomits privately. Harris

VORACIOUS. adj. [from vorare, Fr. vorax, Latin.]

1. Greedy to eat; ravenous; edacious.

So voracious is this hound grown, that it draws in every thing to feed it. Gorton of the tongue

2. Rapacious; greedy.

VORACIOUSLY. adv. [from voracious.]

Greedy; ravenously.

VORACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from voracitas, Fr.]

VORACITY. n. f. [from voracitas, Lat. from vorare.] Greediness; ravine; ravenousness.

He is as well contented with this, as those that with the carities of the earth pamper their voracity. Saunders

Creatures by their voracity pernicious, have commonly fewer young. Deham

VORTICES. n. f. In the plural vortex. [Latin.] Any thing whirled round.

If many contiguous vortices of multi-pitch were each of them as large as those which some suppose to revolve about the sun and fixed stars, yet these, and all their parts, would by their tenacity and fulness communicate the motion to one another. Newton

Nothing else could impel it, unless the ethereal matter be supposed to be carried about the sun, like a vortex, or whirlpool, as a vehicle to convey it and the rest of the planets. Hentley

The gathering number, as it moves along, involves a vast involuntary throng;

Who gently drawn, and struggling left and left, Roll in her vortex, and her power controls. Pope

VORTICATE. adj. [from vortex] Having a whirling motion.

If three equal round vessels be filled, the one with cold water, the other with oil, the third with multi-pitch, and the liquors be stirred about alike, to give them a vorticate motion; the pitch, by its tenacity, will lose its motion quickly; the oil, being less tenacious, will keep it longer; and the water, being still less tenacious, will keep it longest, but yet will lose it in a short time. Newton

It is not a magnetic power, nor the effect of a vorticate motion, that common attempts towards the explanation of gravity. Bentley

VOTARIES. n. f. [from votum, Lat.] One devoted to any pious or laudable thing; one given up by a vow to any service or worship; votary.

I with a more strict restraint Upon the sisterhood, the votaries of St. Clare. Shakespeare Earth, yield me roots! What is here? Gold! yellow, glittering, precious gold! No, gods, I am no idle votary! Shakespeare

VOT

The grey-headed votary,
Like a sad votary in palmer's weed,
Rote from the hindmost wheels of Phæbus' train. Milton

VOTARY. n. f. One devoted, as by a vow, to any particular service, worship, study, or state of life.

Wherefore waste I time to count thee?
Thou art a votary to fond desire. Shakespeare

Thou, fond god of sleep! forget that I Was ever known to be thy votary.

No more my pillow shall thine altar be,
Nor will I seek any more to thee Myself a nothing sacrifice. Crawshaw

'Twas the coldness of the votary, and not the prayer, that was in fault, whenever fervor was deficient at the public office of the church. Fell

By the means, men worship the idols which have been set up in their minds, and stamping the characters of divinity upon absurdities and errors, become zealous votaries to bulls and monkeys. Locke

The enemy of our happiness has his servants and votaries among those who are called by the name of the son of God. Rogers

How can heavenly wisdom prove An instrument to earth's love?

Know'st thou not yet, that men commence Thy votaries for want of sense? Swift

VOTARY. adj. Consequent to a vow.

Superstition is now so well advanced, that men of the first blood are as firm as butchers by occupation, and votary resolution is made equivalent to custom, even in matters of blood. Bacon

VOTARINESS. n. f. [female of votary.] A woman devoted to any worship or state.

The imperial votaries passed on In maiden meditation, fancy free. Shakespeare

His mother was a votary of his pride;
And, in the spiced Indian air by night,
Full often the bath gullip'd by his side. Shakespeare

No votary this votary needs,
Her very syllables are beads. Clarendon

Thy votary from my tender years I am;
And love, like thee, the woods and tylvan game. Dryden

What force have pious vows? the queen of love
His sister sends, her votary from above. Pope

VOTE. n. f. [from votum, Latin.] Suffrage; voice given and numbered.

He that joins instruction with delight,
Profit with pleasure, carries all the votes. Reform

How many have no other ground for their tenets, than the sup old honesty or learning of those of the same persuasion? as if truth were to be established by the vote of the multitude. Locke

The final determination arises from the majority of opinions or votes in the assembly, because they ought to be wayed by the superior weight of reason. Harris

TO VOTE. v. a.

1. To choose by suffrage; to determine by suffrage.

You are not only in the eye and ear of your master, but you are also a favourite, the favourite of the time, and to are in his bottom also, the world hath also voted you, and doth to esteem of you. Bacon

2. To give by vote.

The parliament voted them one hundred thousand pounds, by way of recompence for their sufferings. Swift

VOTER. n. f. [from votum.] One who has the right of giving his voice or suffrage.

Electors growing chargeable, the voters that in the bulk of the common people, have an universally festured into bribery, and drunkenness, mabec, and stunder. Swift

He hates an action bare,
Can sometimes drop a vote's claim,
And give up party to his lane. Swift

VOTIVE. adj. [from votum, Lat.] Given by vow.

Such in life's temple you may find,
On votive tablets to the life-patray'd. Dryden

Venus! take my votive plate;
Since I am not what I was,

VOW

What from this day I shall be,
Venus! let me never see.

TO VOUCH. v. a. [from vouchere, Norman Fr.]

1. To call to witness; to obtest.

The sun and day are witnesses for me;
Let him who fights unseen relate his own,
And touch the silent stars and conscious moon. Dryden

2. To attest; to warrant; to declare; to maintain by repeated affirmations.

You do not give the cheer; the feast is told
That is not often touched, while 'tis making,
'Tis given with welcome. Shakespeare

The sufficiency of the discourse, and the pertinency of it to the design he is upon, touches it worthy of our great apostle.

They made him assumed to touch the truth of the relation, and afterwards to credit it. Atterbury

TO VOUCH. v. n. To bear witness; to appear as a witness; to give testimony.

He declares he will not believe lies, until the elector of Hanover shall vouch for the truth of what he hath so solemnly affirmed. Swift

VOUCH. n. f. [from the verb.] Warrant, attestation.

What praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed? one that, in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very male worth? Shakespeare

VOUCHER. n. f. [from vouch.]

1. One who gives witness to any thing.

All the great writers of that age stand up together as vouchers for one another's reputation. Spectator

I have added nothing to the malice or absurdity of them; which it behoves me to declare, since the vouchers themselves will be so soon lost. Pope

2. Testimony.

Better to starve,
Than crave the hire which first we do deserve
Why in this wolfish gown should I stand here,
To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear
Their needful voucher? Shakespeare

The stamp is a mark, and a public voucher, that a piece of such denomination is of such a weight, and of such a fineness, &c. has so much silver in it. Locke

TO VOUCHSAFE. v. a. [from vouch and safe.]

1. To permit any thing to be done without danger.

2. To condescend to grant.

He grew content to mark their speeches, the marvel at such wit in shepherds, after to like their company, and lastly to vouchsafe conference. Shakespeare

Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two -
Two thousand, fair woman, and I'll Vouchsafe thee hearing. Shakespeare

But it is the sense of two from such delight
Beyond all other, that the same vouchsafed
To cattle and each beast. Milton

It is not I, by the apostle, that God hath Vouchsafed to the heathens the means of eternal life; and yet I will not affirm that God will give eternal life to those, to whom the sound of the gospel never reached. Swift

TO VOUCHSAFE. v. n. To design; to condescend; to yield.

Do I not see Zeluinde, who does not think a thought which is not first weighed by wisdom as a virtue? do I not the vouchsafe to love me with like ardour? Sidney

Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman,
Of these supposed crimes to give me leave
By circumstance but to acquit myself. Shakespeare

Vouchsafe, illustrious Ormond, to behold
What power the charms of beauty had of old. Dryden

VOUCHSAFE. n. f. [from vouchsafe.]

Grant; condescension.

The infinite superiority of God's nature, places a vast disparity between his greatest communication and his creatures incommunicable, and thence follows.

VOW. n. f. [from vovum, Lat.]

1. Any promise made to a divine power;

an act of devotion, by which some part of life, or some part of possessions, is consecrated to a particular purpose.

The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows; they are polluted offerings. Shakespeare

Where honour or where conscience does not bind, No other law shall shackle me, 'Tis to myself I will not be,

Nor shall my future actions be confin'd By my own present mood.

Who by resolves or vows engag'd does stand

For days that yet belong to fate,

Does, like an unthrif, mortgage his estate

Before it comes into his hand.

The boundness of the chafier to

All that he does receive does always owe;

And full, as time comes in, it goes away,

Not to enjoy, but debts to pay.

Unhappy flower, and pupil to a bell,

Which his hour's work, as well as hours, does tell.

Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell.

If you take that vow and that wish to be all one,

you are mistaken; a wish is a far lower degree than a vow.

She took a vow for his return with vain devotion pays.

2. A solemn promise, commonly used for a promise of love or matrimony.

By all the vows that ever men have broke,

In number more than ever women spoke.

Those who wear the woodbine on their brow,

Were knights of love, who never broke their vow,

From to their pig-die land.

To Vow, v. a. [vow, Fr. votum, Lat.]

1. To consecrate by a solemn dedication; to give to a divine power.

David often teacheth unto God the sacrifice of praise, and thanksgiving to the congregation.

For not pay unto the Lord.

When we have not only vowed, but delivered them over into the possession of Almighty God, for the maintenance of his public worship, and the services thereof, they are not now arbitrary, nor to be revoked.

Whoever takes these irreligious men,

With burden of a tickle, weak and faint,

But hears them taking of religion then,

And taking of them soul to evilly tint.

This plant Latinus, when his town he wall'd,

Then found, and from the air Lauratum eul'd;

And last, in honour of his new shade,

He could the laurel to the land be god.

To devote, a ceremonial phrase.

To matter Harvey, upon a time of consideration, I have vowed this my labour.

To Vow, v. n. To make vows or solemn promises.

Do justice how much regard I do you.

That piece of beauty that

There was a time, when I did vow

To be alone, but now the fate of faces

Vowen, part. pass. [from the verb.] Consecrated by solemn declaration.

Vowel, n. f. [vowelle, Fr. vocalis, Lat.] A letter which can be uttered by itself.

I distinguish letters into vowels and consonants, yet not wholly upon their reason, that a vowel may be sounded alone, a consonant not without a vowel, while will not be found all true; for many of the consonants may be sounded alone, and some joined together without a vowel; as, bl, ft; and as we pronounce the latter syllable of people, riddle.

Vowel makes the two vowels meet without an elision.

VOWELOW, n. f. [vow and yellow.] One bound by the same vow.

Who are the votaries,

That are vowless with this virtuous king?

VOYAGE, n. f. [voyage, French.] A travel by sea.

On your forward ran his voyage make,

With his black palmer, that him guided still.

Our ships went sundry voyages, as well to the pillars of Hercules, as to other parts in the Atlantic and Mediterranean seas.

This great man acted like an able pilot in a long voyage; contented to sit in the cabin while the winds were abated, but ready to resume the helm when the storm arose.

2. Course; attempt; undertaking. A low phrase.

If he should intend his voyage towards my wife,

I would turn her loose to him, and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it be on my head.

If you make your voyage upon her, and prevail, I am no further your enemy.

3. The practice of travelling.

All nations have interknowledge of one another, by voyage into foreign parts, or strangers that come to them.

To VOYAGE, v. n. [voyager, Fr. from the noun.] To travel by sea.

For, voyaging to learn the dreadful art,

To hunt with deadly drugs the barbed dart;

His restless impact the baneful trust.

To VOYAGE, v. a. To travel; to pass over.

I with pain

Voyag'd the untried, vast, unbounded deep

Of horrible confusion.

VOYAGER, n. f. [voyageur, French, from voyage.] One who travels by sea.

Did not in thy constant travelling

To do as other voyagers, and make

Some turns into left creeks, and wisely take

Fresh water at the Hellicoman spring.

How comfortable this is, voyagers can best tell.

Deny yourself, ye deny in vain,

A private voyager I pass the main.

UP, adv. [up Sax. op, Dutch and Danish.]

1. Aloft; on high; not down.

From those two brethren, admire the wonderful changes of worldly things; now up, now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stage play.

Hath his course he bends, but up or down,

By center, or eccentric, hard to tell,

Or longitude.

2. Out of bed; in a state of being risen from rest.

Helen was not up, was she?

His chamber being commonly fix'd with doors,

when he was up, he gave his legs, arms, and breast to his servants to dress him, his eyes to his letters, and ears to petitioners.

3. In the state of being risen from a seat.

Upon his first rising, a general whisper ran among the country people, that the Roger was up.

4. From a state of decumbiture or concealment.

5. In a state of being built.

Up with my tent, here will I lie to-night;

But where to-morrow — well, all's one for that.

6. Above the horizon.

As soon as the sun is up, set upon the city.

Now morn with rosy light had streak'd the sky,

Up rose the sun, and up rose Emily;

Adapted her early steps to Cynthia's face.

7. To a state of proficiency.

Till we have wrought ourselves up into this degree of christian indifferency, we are in bondage.

8. In a state of exaltation.

Those that were up themselves kept others low;

Those that were low the melior held others hard,

Ne suffer'd them to rise, or greater grow.

Henry the fifth is crown'd, up, vanity!

Down, royal state! all you large councillors, hence!

9. In a state of climbing.

Straight the rumour flew

Up to the city; which heard, up they drew

By dices and breaks.

10. In a state of insurrection.

The gentle archbishop of York is up

With well appear'd powers.

Relics there are up,

And put the English men into the sword.

Thou hast heard me, my foul's up in arms,

And many each part about me.

11. In a state of being increased, or raised.

Great and profound as the sea is raised in little brooks by a sudden rain; the year quickly up, and at the commencement he poured unexpectedly in upon us, it overtook us.

12. From a remoter place, coming to any person or place.

As a boat was whetting his teeth, up comes a fox to him.

13. Into order, as, he drew up his regiment.

14. From younger to elder years.

I am ready to die from my youth up.

15. Up and down. Dapperly; here and there.

Abundance of them are seen scattered up and down like many little islands when the tide is low.

16. Up and down. Backward and forward.

Our defence is, in this present controversy, not to be carried up and down with the waves of uncertain arguments, but rather positively to lead on the minds of the simpler sort by plain and easy degrees, till the very nature of the thing itself do make manifest what is truth.

The skipping king he tumbled up and down,

With shallow jesters.

Up and down he travels his ground;

Now wants nothing below, now takes again;

Then humbly thrusts a thistle, then lends a wound;

Now back he gives, then rubs communion.

Now an I death

Shall dwell at ease, and up and down unben

Will sit on the bottom air.

On this windy sea of land, the fond

Walks up and down a while, but on his prey.

What a notable life dost thou lead, says a dog to a hen, to run haying up and down thus in weeds.

She has got the wanders up and down

Through all her face, and lights up every charm.

17. Up to. To an equal level with.

I think was parallel with the eye of an overcast thrift, and set on the chimney water, that led from his lips when ever he attempted to drink it.

18. Up to. Adequately to.

The water in the city is raised up to the religion of the country, when the law nothing is applicable to morality.

The eyes determined to have up to the long rule by which they receive judgment lives to work.

We must not only mortify all the passions that solicit us, but we must learn to do so with and up to the positive precepts of our duty.

19. Up with. A phrase that signifies the act of raising any thing to give a blow.

She, quick and proud, and who on I'd's quite,

Up with her fist, and took him on the face.

Another came, quoth she, become more wild;

Thus she did kiss her hand with little grace.

20. It is added to verbs implying some accumulation, or increase.

If we could number up those prodigious towns that sprung in every part of the Empire of old Rome, they would amount to more than can be found in any the parts of Europe at the time existent.

UP, interj.

1. A word signifying to rise from bed.

Up, up, comes glaucy, his break of day,

Go drive the deer, and chase the gray pig.

2. A word of exhortation, exciting or rousing to action.

U P B

Up there, Methusalem, the monarch's wife of mine;
Such came of mourning never lastly done;
Up, grails glows, and up, my mortal time;
Matter of nothing now, but thou have none more.

Put up, and enter now into full bliss
Up, up, for thou'st take, twelve lemons with you.

And long to call you chert
Up, prep. From a lower to a higher part;
not down.

In going up a hill, the faces will be most weary;
In going down, the thighs; for that in lifting the feet, when a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body bears it most upon the knees, and in going down, upon the thighs.

To UPRIDE, v. a. pret. upbore; part. pall upborn. [up and bear.]

1. To sustain aloft; to support in elevation.
Upbore with indistinguishable wings
Rang'd in a line the ready warriors found,
Saw from the coach, and smelt the overboard;
Saw as on wings of wind upbore the yells,
And drifts of tiding dust involve the sky.

2. To raise aloft.
Thus with prayer,
Or one short flight of human breath, upbore
Even to the tent of God.

A monstrous wave upbore
The chief, and dash'd him on the craggy shore.

3. To support from falling.
Vital powers, given way both weak and vain,
For want of food and sleep, which two upbore,
The weary patient, the frail bed of man.

To UPRIDE, v. a. [upgeladen, up-geped in, Saxon.]

1. To charge contemptuously with any thing disgraceful. It has commonly with, sometimes of, before the thing imputed;
sometimes it has only an accusative of the thing, as in Milton, and sometimes the person without the thing, or the thing without the person.

The fathers, when they were upriden with that defect, comforted themselves with the meditation of God's most glorious nature, who did not therefore the less accept of their hearty affection.

It forc'd in me
But as an honour forc'd in with bold's hand,
And I had many living to upbraid
My gain of it by their allurances,
Which daily grew to quarrel.

2. To object as matter of reproach, with to be fore the person.

Those that have been bred together, are apt to envy their equals when raised; for a doll upbraid unto them their own fortunes, and pointeth at them.

Any of these, without regarding the pains of churchmen, grog or upbraid to them those that remains of intemperate pity, which the rapacity of some ages has borne in.

3. To urge with reproach.
I have too long born
Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffs.

He that knowingly commits an ill, has the up-
braidings of his own conscience.

He that knowingly commits an ill, has the up-
braidings of his own conscience.

He that knowingly commits an ill, has the up-
braidings of his own conscience.

He that knowingly commits an ill, has the up-
braidings of his own conscience.

He that knowingly commits an ill, has the up-
braidings of his own conscience.

4. To reproach on account of a benefit received from the reproacher.

Every hour
He flings into one gross crime or other;
His knights grow riotous, and he himself upbraideth us.

On every tongue.
If any lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth liberally, and upbraideth not.

5. To bring reproach upon; to show faults by being in a state of comparison.

Alh, my son, how evil sits it me to have such a foe; and how much doth thy kindness upbraid my wicked deeds!

The counsel which I cannot take,
Instead of healing, but upbraideth my weakness.

6. To treat with contempt. Not in use.
There also was that mighty monarch laid,
Low under all, yet above all in pride;
That name of native he did foul upbraid,
And would, as Amos's son, be magnify'd.

UPRAIDER, n. f. [from upbraid.] One that reproaches.

UPRAIDINGLY, adv. By way of reproach.

The time was when men would learn and study good things, not envy those that had them. Then men were had in price for learning; now letters only make men vile. He is upraidingly called a poet, as if it were a contemptible nickname.

To UPRAY, v. a. [A word formed from upbraid by Spenser, for the sake of a rhyming termination.] To shame.

Vile knight,
That knights and knight-hood doth with shame
upbraid.

And do wilt th' ensample of thy child-hood might,
Unhappily, weak, old women thus to fight.

UPROUGHT, part. pass. of upbring. Educated; nurtured.

Divinely wrought,
And of the blood of angels, heavenly born,
And with the crew of blessed souls upbrought,
Each of which did her with her gifts adorn.

UPRIFT, [Participle from to cast up.] Thrown upward.

Prads with upcast eyes forsake their shade,
And gaze, as if I were to be obey'd.

UPRIDE, n. f. A term of howling; a throw; a calf.

Was there ever man had such luck? when I killed
the jack, upon an upcast to be hit away!

To UPRIDE, v. a. [up and gather.] To contract.

Houdell he close upgall'd more and more
Into his den, that his decedent traitor
By his there being might not be heard,
Ne any note, ne any question made.

UPRAID, adj. [up and hand.] Lifted by the hand.

The upraid sledge is used by an few known workmen, who work is not of the finger, yet requires help to gather. They use it with both their hands before them, and seldom hit the hammer by her than their head.

UPRIED, pret. and part. pass. of uphold.
Maintained; sustained.

He who reigns
Monarch in heav'n, till then, as one to cure,
Sat on his throne, upheld by old repaire.

UPRIED, adj. [up and hold.] Difficult;
like the labour of climbing a hill.

What an upraid labour must it be to a farmer, who has those first inducements to mow at twenty years of age, which others are taught at ten.

Yet, as immortal, in our uphill chase
We press our fortune with unslacken'd pace.

To UPHOLD, v. a. [up and board.] To treasure; to store; to accumulate in private places.

Heaps of huge words uphoarded hideously
With horrid found, though having little sense,
They think to be chief pride of poetry;

And thereby wanting due intelligence,
Have marr'd the face of goodly poeche,
And made a monster of their fantastic.

1. To uphold; to support; to sustain; to keep from falling.

The mournful train with groans, and hands upheld,
Befought his pity.

2. To support; to sustain; to keep from falling.

White life upholds this arm,
This arm upholds the house of Lancaster.

3. To keep from dejection.

There is due from the judge to the advocate for a commendation, where a man is upbraided, for that upholds in the client the reputation of his counsel, and beats down in him the content of his enemies.

4. To support in any state of life.

Many younger brothers have neither lands nor means to uphold themselves.

5. To continue; to keep from defeat.

6. To keep from being lost.

In spite of spite, alone upholds the day.

7. To continue without failing.

8. To continue in being.

1. A supporter.

2. A sustainer in being.

3. An undertaker; one who provides for funerals.

UPHOLD, v. a. [a corruption of up-holder.] One who furnishes houses; one who fits up apartments with beds and furniture.

If a corner of the hanging wants a single nail,
Send for the upholsterer.

Here wax as yet, you fashion him with ease,
Your barber, cook, upholsterer.
UPLAND, n. s. [up and land.] Higher ground.

Men at first, after the flood, lived in the uplands and holes of the mountains, and by degrees sunk into the plains.

UPLAND, adj.

1. Higher in situation.

Here in Cornwall do no more, by nature than others; for where by choice, conceive themselves an enlarged society from the upland dwellers, and carry animosity against them.

Sometimes with become delight
The upland hamlets will invite.

2. Rude; savage. This is the meaning in Chapman; probably because the up-landers, having less commerce, were less civilized.

And long'd to see this heap of fortune,
That to literature was, and upland rude,
That lawless domineer'd humane he had learn'd

UPLANDISH, adj. [from upland.] Mountainous, inhabiting mountains.

Loon-like, uplandish, and mere wild,
Slave to his pride, and all his nerves being naturally cougl'd
Of eminent strength, stalks out and preys upon a fily sheep

UPPLA'S, v. a. [up and lay.] To board,
to lay up.

We are but farmers of ourselves; yet may,

And, with uplaid aims, is late arriv'd
At Rivermouth.

Together both, with next t' almighty, and Uplaid monument, one broke they am'd; Milton
Stout talking to his nearli-mind.

With head uplaid above the wave, and eyes
But sparkling haz'd.

When by pull, engam'd golly mortals perish,
He gods behind them, punishment with pleasure,
And lay the uplaid under-bolt aside.

Songs, fennets, epigrams, the winds uplaid,
And whist them back to Evans, Young, and Swift

UPMOST, adj. [an irregular superlative formed from up.] Highest; topmost.

Away! ye flurs,
That full life upmost when the nation boils,
That have but just enough of sense to know
The maker's voice, when called to depart

UPON'S, prep. [up and on.]

1. Not under; noting being on the top.
As I did stand my watch upon the hill,
I look'd toward Birnam; and anon methought
The wood began to move.

2. Not within; being on the outside.
Blood that is upon the altar.

3. Thrown over the body, as clothes.
I have seen her rise from her bed, draw her Eight-gown upon her

4. By way of imprecation or imprecation.
Hard-hearted Clifford! take me from the world;
My tool to heaven, my blood upon your heads.

No man, who had a mind to do wrong, would be awed from doing it by a law that is always to be a foe to a feckard, and must never be pleaded against him, or executed upon him

5. It expresses oblation, or profection.
How? that I should see her?
Upon the love, and truth, and vows, which I Have made to thy command!—I, her!—her blood!

UPON, prep. [up and on.]

6. It is used to express any hardship or mischievous.

If we would neither impose upon ourselves, nor others, we must lay aside that fallacious method of confining by the lump.

That is not a fault inseparable from faults, but is the sin of the managers; it is not naturally upon the thing, but only upon the contingent circumstances and manner of doing

7. In consequence of. Now little in use.

Let me not find you before me again upon any complaint who never

Then the princes of Germany had but a due fear of the greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension of the ambitious designs of that nation.

I wish it may not be concluded, left upon second cognitions, there should be cause to alter

These forces took hold of divers, in some upon dilettant, in some upon ambition, in some upon levity, and desire of change, and in some few upon confidence and belief, but in most upon supposition; and in divers out of dependence upon some of the better sort, who did in secret favour their aims

He made a great difference between people that did rebel upon wantonness, and them that did rebel upon want

Upon pay they were taken away, upon ignorance
they are again demand'd

Promises can be of no force, unless they be freed to be conditional, and unless that duty proposed to be a force by them, be acknowledged to be part of that condition, upon performance of which those promises do, and upon the neglect of which those promises shall be of no long to any.

The king had no kindness for him upon an old account, as remembering the part he had acted against the earl of Strafford

Though his offers did in never for pleasing and alarming a shock at first, yet the remote and reward regrets of the soul, upon the commission of it, immediately overbalance those faint and transient gladifications.

The common corruption of human nature, upon the bare stock of its original depravity, does naturally proceed to far.

When we make judgments upon general pro-pensions, they are made rather from the impulse of our own fancy, than from reason

'Tis not the thing that is done, but the intention in doing it, that makes good or evil. There is a great difference between what we do upon force, and what upon inclination

The determination of the said upon enquiry, is following the direction of that mode.

There broke out an imputation quarrel between the parents, the one valuing himself too much upon his birth, and the other upon his possessions

The design was discovered by a person, as much noted for his skill in guile, as in politics, upon the false, mercenary end of getting money by wasters.

most wilful misbehaviour, upon our repentance and amendment

Upon lessening interest to four per cent, and the price of your native commodities, of lessening your trade

The mind, upon the forgetting of any new notion, runs immediately after failures to make it the clearer.

If, upon the perusal of such writings, he does not find himself delighted; or if, upon reading the accused passages in such authors, he finds a coldness and indifference in his thoughts, he ought to conclude, that he wants the faculty of discovering them.

This advantage we lost upon the invention of fire-arms.

9. In a state of view.

Is it upon record? or else reported
Superstitiously, from age to age?

The next heroes we meet with upon record were Romulus and Numa.

The athletes taken notice of among the ancients are left behind upon the records of history

10. Supposing a thing granted.

If you lay down this is the nature of nature and invention, and there was no necessity, here, and therefore the things were slowly invented, this is a good answer upon our last objection

11. Relating to a subject.

Ambitious Contention would not cease,
Till the low-angled France, and all the world,
Upon the right and party of her son

Yet when seven minutes were over to serve,
Would you but in some words upon it business,
If you would cut the time

Upon this, I remember a friend of refined civility, that when any woman went to see another of equal birth, she worked at her own work in the other's house

12. With respect to.

The English lawyers, who were sent for, were examined upon all questions proposed to them.

13. In consideration of.

Upon the whole matter, and humbly speaking,
I doubt there was a rash somewhere.

Upon the whole, it will be necessary to avoid that perpetual repetition of the same epithets which we had at Home

14. In naming a particular day.

Constantly he looks upon us, even away to his rest, upon the day on which their marriage was to be solemnized

15. Noting reliance or trust.

We now very hardly spend upon the hope
Of what is to come in God commands us, by our dependence upon his truth, and his holy word, to believe a fact that we do not understand; and this is no more than what we do every day in the works of nature, upon the credit of men's hearing

16. Near to; noting situation.

The enemy had set themselves at Aldermston, and there, in Newbury and Reading, in two other battles upon the river Kennet, over which he was to pass

Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand. Shakespeare.

29. By noting the means of support.

Upon a closer inspection of these bodies, the shells are added to the numbers of them in such a manner, as bodies lying on the sea-shores upon which they live. Woodward.

30. Upon is, in many of its significations, now contracted into on, especially in poetry. See ON. The meaning of this particle is very multifarious; for it is applied both to place, which seems its original signification; to time, which seems its secondary meaning; and to intellectual or corporeal operations. It always retains an intimation, more or less obscure, of time, substitution, something precedent, or some subject. It is not only to reduce it to any general idea.

UPPER. adj. [a comparative from up.]

1. Superiour in place; higher.
Give the lion head a majestic grace, the month smiling; which you shall do by making a thin upper lip, and shadowing the month line a little in the corners. Peacham.

Our knight did have no less a pack
Of his own buttocks on his back;
Which now had almost got the upper Hand of his head for want of crupper. Hudibras.
The understanding was then clear, and the soul's upper region lofty and serene, free from the vapours of the inferior affections. South.

With speed to-night repair.
For not the gods nor angry Jove will bear
Thy lawless wounding walks in upper air. Dryden.
Deep as the dark internal waters lie
From the bright regions of the cheerful sky,
So far the proud ascending rocks invade Heaven's upper realms, and cast a dreadful shade. Addison.

2. Higher in power or dignity.

The like corrupt and unreasonable custom prevailed far, and got the upper hand of right reason with the greatest part. Hooker.

UPPERMOST. adj. [superlative from upper.]

1. Highest in place.
The waters, called the waters above the heavens, are but the clouds, and waters engendered in the uppermost air. Balegh.

In all things follow nature, not painting clouds in the bottom of your piece, and waters in the uppermost parts. Dryden.

2. Highest in power or authority.

The lower powers are gotten uppermost, and we see, like men on our heads, as Plato observed of old, that on the right hand, which is indeed on our left. Glennville.

'Tis all one to the common people who's uppermost. L'Estrange.

This species of discretion will carry a man late through all parties, so far, that whatever station happens to be uppermost, his claim is allowed for a share. Swift.

3. Predominant; most powerful.

As in perfumes composed with art and cost,
'Tis hard to lay what scent is uppermost,
Nor this part musk or civet can we call,
Or amber, but a rich result of all,
So she was all a sweet. Dryden.

UPRIS. adj. [from up.] Proud; arrogant. A low word.

To UPRIS. v. a. [up and raise.] To raise up; to exalt.

Stood Theodore surpris'd in deadly fright,
With chattering teeth, and bristling hair upright. Dryden.

3. Honest; not declining from the right.
Such neighbour nearness should not partialize
Th' untopping firmness of my upright soul. Shakespeare.

How hast thou intoll'd

Thy malice into thousands, once upright
And faithful, now prov'd false? Milton.

The most upright of mortal men was he;
The most sincere and holy woman he. Dryden.

UPRIGHT. n. f. Elevation; orthography.

You have the orthography, or upright, of this ground-plot, and the explanation thereof, with a scale of feet and inches. Morton.

UPRIGHTLY. adv. [from upright.]

1. Perpendicularly to the horizon.

2. Honestly; without deviation from the right.

Men by nature apter to rage than decent, not greatly ambitious, more than to be well and uprightly dealt with. Salicy.

Prints in judgment, and their delegate judges, must judge the causes of all persons uprightly and impartially, without any personal consideration. Taylor.

To live uprightly then is sure the best,
To save ourselves, and not to damn the rest. Dryd.

UPRIGHTNESS. n. f. [from upright.]

1. Perpendicular erection. This was anciently accented on the second.

So the fair tree, which still peeks eyes
Her form and state while no wind blows,
In forms from that upright's flowers,
And the glad earth about her throws.

With treasure from her yielding boughs. Waller.

2. Honesty; integrity.

The Jews, which believed not, set all the city on an uproar. Acts.

It were well if his holiness had not let the world in an uproar, by nourishing of war. Raleigh.

He levied forces in a disordered uproar, about the treason rested in him and some other his accomplices. Hayward.

The uproar was so loud, that the accusation itself could not be heard. Holaday.

Others, with vast Typhoean rage more fell,
Rend up both rocks and hills, and ride the air
In whirlwind; hell scarce holds the wild uproar. Milton.

Horror thus prevail'd,
And wild uproar 'd wh, who at length will end
This long pernicious fray? Philips.

The impiety of this sentiment set the audience in an uproar; and made Savanes, though an intimate friend of the poet, go out of the theatre with indignation. Addison.

To UPROAR. v. a. [from the noun.] To throw into confusion. Not in use.

Had I power, I should Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell,
Uproar the universal peace, confound
All unity on earth. Shakespeare.

To UPROOT. v. a. [up and root.] To tear up by the root.

Orpheus could lead the savage race,
And trees uprooted left their place;
Seductions of the lyre.
But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher;
When to her organ vocal breath was giv'n,
An angel heard,
And fought appear'd,
Mistaking earth for heav'n. Dryden.

To UPROUSE. v. a. [up and rouse.] To waken from sleep; to excite to action.

Thou art uprous'd by some distemperature. Shakespeare.

UPSHOT. n. f. [up and shot.] Conclusion; end; last amount; final event.

With this he knoll'd his ambitious flights
To like desire and praise of noble fame,
The only upshot whereto he dath aim. Hubb. Tale.

I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot. Shakespeare.

In this upshot, purposes mislook
Fall on the inventors heads. Shakespeare.

Every leading demonstration to the main upshot of all, which is the proportion betwixt the sphere and cylinder, is a pledge of the wit and reason of that mathematician. Marr.

Upon the upshot, afflictions are but the methods of a merciful providence, to force us upon the only means of testing matters right. L'Estrange.

Here is an end of the matter, says the prophet here is the upshot and result of all; here terminate both the prophecies of Daniel and St. John. Barnet.

Let's now make an end of matters peaceably, as we shall quickly come to the upshot of our affair. Arbutnot.

At the upshot, after a life of perpetual application, to reflect that you have been doing nothing for yourself, and that the fame or less industry might have gained you a friendship that can never deceive; and a glory, which, though not to be had till after death, yet shall be felt and enjoyed to eternity. Pope.

Mortimer.

URIM, n. f.

Urim and thummim were something in Aaron's breast-plate; but what, critics and commentators are by no means agreed. The word urim signifies light, and thummim perfection. It is most probable that they were only names given to signify the clearness and certainty of the divine answers which were obtained by the high priest consulting God with his breast-plate on, in contradistinction to the obscure, enigmatical, uncertain, and imperfect answers of the heathen oracles.

Newton.

He in celestial pompously all arm'd,
Of radiant urim, work divinely wrought.

Milton.

URINAL, n. f. [urinal, Fr. from urine.]

Gay paid his courtship with the crowd, As far as modest pride allow'd; Rejected a servile usher's place, And leaves St. James's in disgrace. Swift.

2. An under-teacher; one who introduces young scholars to higher learning.

Though grammar's profits less than rhetoric's are, Yet even in those his usher claims a share. Dryden.

To USHER. v. a. [from the noun.] To introduce as a forerunner or harbinger; to fore-run.

No fun shall ever usher forth my honours, Or gild again the noble troops that waited Upon my toils. Shakespeare.

The fun, Declin'd, was passing now with prone career To th' ocean flies; and, in th' ascending scale Of heav'n, the stars, that usher evening, rose. Milton.

As the deluge is represented a disruption of the axis, so the future confusion of the earth is to be ushered in, and accompanied, with violent earthquakes upon nature, and the chief will be earthquakes. Burnet.

With songs and dance we celebrate the day, And with due honours usher in the May. Dryden.

The Examiner was ushered into the world by a letter, setting forth the great genius of the author. Addison.

Oh name for ever sad, for ever dear! Still breath'd in sighs, still ushers d with a tear. Pope.

USQUEB'RGH. n. f. [An Irish and Erse word, which signifies the water of life.]

It is a compounded distilled spirit, being drawn on aromatics; and the Irish sort is particularly distinguished for its pleasant and mild flavour. The Highland sort is somewhat hotter; and, by corruption, in Scottish they call it whisky.

USURION. n. f. [usurion, Fr. usur, Latin.]

The act of borrowing; the state of being borrowed.

USURIOUS. adj. [usurum, Latin.] Having the quality of borrowing.

The power of a borrowing glass is by an usurious quality in the mirror or glass, arising from a certain unknown substantial form. Watts.

USUAL. adj. [usuel, French.] Common; frequent; customary; frequently occurring.

Consultation with oracles was a thing very usual and frequent in their times. Hooker.

Could I the care of Providence deserve, Heav'n must destroy me, if it would preserve; And that's my lot, or sure it would have lent Some usual evil for my punishment. Dryden.

For roots and herbage, rais'd at Laura's spire, With humble milk, compos'd his usual fare. Harte.

USUALLY. adv. [from usual.] Commonly; frequently; customarily.

The similarity and the similitudes of different things, wherein the force is convenient, is usually a bar to the discerning the dissimilitudes of similar appearances, which is the business of discretion. Fell.

If men's desires are usually as large as their abilities, what could we look to allure the former, by that we might engage the latter. South.

Where men err against this method, it is usually on purple, and to show their learning. Swift.

USUALNESS. n. f. [from usual.] Commonness; frequency.

USURPTION. n. f. [usur and capis, Lat.]

In the civil law, the acquisition of the property of a thing by possession and enjoyment thereof for a certain term of years prescribed by law. Di.

USURV'CT. n. f. [usuravit, French; usur

U S U

and fructus, Latin.] The temporary use; enjoyment of the profits, without power to alienate.

The persons receiving the same have only the usufruct thereof, and not any fee or inheritance therein.

USUFRUCTUARY. n. f. [usufructuaire, Fr. usufructuarius, Latin.] One that has the use and temporary profit, not the property, of a thing.

The portions of parishes are not in law accounted proprietors, but only usufructuaries, as having no right of fee simple vested in them.

TO USURE. v. n. [usura, Latin.] To practise usury; to take interest for money.

Is this the balsam that the usurer lends,
Pours into captain's wounds?

USURER. n. f. [usurier, French; usura, Latin.] One who puts money out at interest. Commonly used for one that takes exorbitant interest.

Thou shalt not think thy shape, thy love, thy wit,
Which, like an usurer, abroad 'tis lent,
And usest none in that true use indeed,
Which should be best thy shape, thy love, thy wit.

When usurers tell their gold 't' the field,
And bawds and whores do churches build,
If thou lend money to any that is poor,
Thou shalt not lend to him as an usurer, nor lay upon him usury.

There may be no commutative injustice, while each retains a mutual benefit, the usurer for his money, the borrower for his industry.
The usurer often occasions great tumults among the people; yet he that took it was not reckoned to transgress any law; and there were some greedy usurers that exacted double, triple.

USURIOUS. adj. [usurarius, French; from usury.] Given to the practice of usury; exorbitantly greedy of profit.

For every hour that thou wilt spare me now,
I will allow,
Usurious god of love, twenty to thee,
When with my brown my grey hairs equal be.

TO USURP. v. a. [usurper, French; usurpo, Latin.] To possess by force or intrusion; to seize or possess without right.

So ugly a darkness, as it would prevent the night's coming, usurped the day's right.
Not having the natural superiority of fathers, their power must be usurped, and then unlawful; or, if lawful, then granted or contented unto by them over whom they exercise the same, or else given them extraordinarily from God.

In as much as the due estimation of heavenly truth dependeth wholly upon the known and approved authority of those famous oracles of God, it greatly behoves the church to have always most special care, lest by an invocations usurp the room and title of divine worship.

Victorious prince of York!
Before I see thee seated in that throne
Which now the house of Lancaster usurps,
These eyes shall never close.

What art thou, that usurp'st this time of night,
Together with that too and warlike form?
Their fox-like thefts are in rank, as a man may
And whole pages usurp d from one author.

So he dies,
But soon revives; death over him no pow'r
Shall long usurp; ere the third dawning light
Return, the stars of usurp shall see him rite
Out of his grave.

All fountains of the deep
Broke up, shall leave the ocean to usurp
Beyond all bounds, till inundation rise Above the highest hills.

Farewell court,
Where vice not only hath usurp'd the place,
But the reward, and even the name, of virtue.

U T E

Your care about your banks infers a fear
Of threatening floods and inundations near:
If so, a just reprisal would only be
Of what the land usurp'd upon the sea.

Who next usurps will a just prince appear,
So much your ruin will his reign endure.

Struggling in vain, impatient of her load,
And lab'ring underneath the pond'rous God,
The more she strove to shake him from her breast,
With more and far superior force he prest'd,
Commands his entrance, and without controul
Usurps her organs, and inspires her soul.

Who's this, that dares usurp
The guards and habit of Numidia's prince?

USURPATION. n. f. [usurpation, French; from usurp.] Forceful, unjust, illegal seizure or possession.

The Piercies,
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavour'd by advancement to the throne.

Succeeding kings recovery of their right from ing usurpations, shall never be prejudiced by any act of mine.

To raise a tempest on the sea was usurpation on the prerogative of Neptune, who had given him no leave.

O baseness to support a tyrant throne,
And crush your treblehorn between of the world!
Nay, to become a part of usurpation,
T' expose the tyrant's person and her crimes.

Whatever opposition was made to the usurpations of king James, proceeded altogether from the church of England.

USURPER. n. f. [from usurp.] One who seizes or possesses that to which he has no right. It is generally used of one who excludes the right heir from the throne.

Ever since he hath continued his first usurped power, and now exacteth upon all men what he list: so that now to induce or expel an usurper, should be no unjust enterprise, but a restoration of antient right unto the crown.

Richard duke of York
Was rightful heir unto the English crown;
And that your majesty was an usurper.

But this usurper his encroachment proud Stays not on man; to God his tow'rd intends Siege and defiance.

A few usurpers to the shades descend
By a dry death, or with a quiet end.

He griev'd, the land he freed should be oppress'd,
And he left for it than usurpers do.

USURPINGLY. adv. [from usurp.] Without just claim.

Lay aside the sword,
Which sways usurpingly these several titles,
And put the same into young Arthur's hand.
Thy right royal sovereign.

USURY. n. f. [usuré, French; usura, Latin.]

1. Money paid for the use of money; interest.

He that high does sit, and all things see
With equal eyes their merits to refigure,
Behold, what ye this day have done for me,
And what I cannot quit, requite with usury.

The wished day is come at last,
That shall, for all the pains and sorrows past,
Pay to her usury of long delight.

Our angles too like money put to usury, they may thrive, though we sit still and do nothing.

What he borrows from the antients, he repays with usury of his own; in coin as good, and almost as universally valuable.

2. The practice of taking interest. It is commonly used with some reproach.

Usury bringeth the treasure of a realm into few hands, for the usurer being at certainties, and others at uncertainties, at the end most of the money will be in the box.

UTENSIL. n. f. [utensile, French; utensile, low Latin.] An instrument for any use,

U T M

such as the vessels of the kitchen, or tools of a trade.

Burn but his books; he has brave utensils,
Which, when he has a house, he 'll deck withal.

Mules after these, camels and dromedaries,
And waggons fraught with utensils of war.
Tithes and lands given to God are never, and plate, vestments, and other sacred utensils, are seldom consecrated.

The springs of life their former vigour feel;
Such zeal he had for that vile utensil.

UTERINE. adj. [uterin, French; uterinus, Latin.] Belonging to the womb.

In hot climates, and where the uterine parts exceed in heat, by the coldness of some simple, they may be reduced unto a conceptive constitution.

The vessels of the interior glandulous substance of the womb, are contorted with turnings and meanders, that they might accommodate themselves without danger of rupture to the necessary extension of the uterine habitation.

UTERUS. n. f. [Latin.] The womb.

UTILITY. n. f. [utilité, French, utilitas, Latin.] Usefulness; profit; convenience; advantageousness: applied to things only; as, this book is of great utility; not, this book was written for the utility of scholars.

Those things which have long gone together, are contemperate; whereas new things piece not so well; but though they help by their utility, yet they growable by their incontinuity.

Should we blindly obey the restraints of physicians and astrologers, we should confine the utility of physick unto a very few days.

M. Zulchem desired me that I would give a relation of the cure of the gout, that might be made publick, as a thing which might prove of common utility to a great numbers as were subject to that disease.

UTIS. n. f. A word which probably is corrupted, at least is not now understood.

Utis was the octave of a faint's day, and may perhaps be taken for any festivity.
Then here will be old utis: it will be an excellent stratagem.

UTMOST. adj. [utimæst, Saxon; from
utren.]

1. Extreme; placed at the extremity.
Much like a subtle spider, which doth sit
In middle of her web, which spreadeth wide;
It might do touch the utmost thread of it.

She feels it infinitely on every side.
As far remov'd from God, and light of heav'n,
As from the center thence to th' utmost pole.

I went, by your command,
To view the utmost limits of the land.

2. Being in the highest degree.

I'll undertake to bring him,
Where he shall answer by a lawful form.

In peace, to his utmost peril.

UTMOST. n. f. The most that can be;
the greatest power; the highest degree;
the greatest effort.

What miseries,
Shall be the general's fault, though he perform
To th' utmost of a man.

I will be free,
Even to the utmost as I please in words.

Such a conscience, as has employed the utmost of its ability to give itself the best information, and clearest knowledge of its duty, that it can, is a rational ground for a man to build such an hope upon.

Try your fortune.—
—I have to the utmost. Dost thou think me desperate?

Without just cause?
A man, having carefully enquired into all the grounds of probability and unlikelihood, and done his utmost to inform himself in all particulars, may come to acknowledge on which side the probability rests.

The enemy thinks of raising three score thousand men: let us perform our utmost, and we shall overcome them with our multitudes. Addison.

U T T

UTTER. adj. [utteren, Saxon.]

1. Situate on the outside, or remote from the centre.

In my sight
Through utter and through middle darkness borne,
I long of chaos and eternal night. Milton.

1. Placed beyond any compass; out of any place.

Pursue these fons of darkness; drive them out
From all heav'n's bounds into the utter deep Milton.

Extreme; excessive; utmost. This seems to be Milton's meaning here, though the former sense may serve.

Such place eternal justice had prepar'd
For those rebellious, here their prison ordain'd
In utter darkness, and their portion set
As far remov'd from God, and light of heav'n,
As from the center thrice to th' utmost pole Milton.

Complete; total.

The parliament thought the utter taking it away necessary for the preservation of the kingdom Clarendon.

Peremptory.

There could not be any other estimate made of the loss, than by the utter refusal of the auxiliary regiments of London and Kent to march farther Clarendon.

Perfect; mere.

They feel fewer corporal pains, and are utter angers to all those anxious thoughts which disturb mankind. Atterbury.

UTTER. v. a. [from the adjective;
to make publick, or let out; palam jacere.]

1. To speak; to pronounce; to express.

Men speak not with the instruments of writing, neither writ with the instruments of speech, and yet things recorded with the one, and uttered with the other, may be preached well enough with both. Hooker.

These very words I've heard him utter. Shakspeare.

There's more gold: but, firrah,
We say the dead are well. Bring it to that,
The gold I give thee will I melt, and pour Down thy ill-uttering throat. Shakspeare.

Shall not they teach thee and tell thee, and utter words but of their heart? Job.

Who knows but his poor, bleeding heart,
And oft agonies, remember'd Marcia,
And the last words he utter'd call'd me cruel! Addison.

2. To disclose; to discover; to publish.

When do partial and sinister affections more utter the insides, than when an election is committed to many. Whigitt.

Were it folly to be modest in uttering what is known to all the world? Raleigh.

I cannot my words should not reach your ears;
but what I utter'd was most true. Dryden.

3. To tell; to vend.

Such mortal drugs I have, but Mantua's law
Is death to any he that utters them. Shakspeare.

They bring it home, and utter it commonly by the name of Newfoundland fish. Abbot.

The Devonshire and Somersetshire graziers feed scarcely great drives of cattle in the north quarter of Cornwall, and utter them at home. Carew.

4. To disperse; to emit at large.

To preserve us from ruin, the whole kingdom should continue in a firm resolution never to recede or utter this fatal coin. Swift.

UTTERABLE. adj. [from utter.] Expressible;
such as may be uttered.

UTTERANCE. n. f. [from utter.]

1. Pronunciation; manner of speaking.

He with utterance grave, and countenance sad,
Pursued to point discourses of his voyage. Spenser.

Many a man thinks admirably well, who has a poor utterance; while others have a charming manner of speech, but their thoughts are trifling. Watts.

V U L

2. [outrance, French.] Extremity; terms of extreme hostility. Out of use.

Of him I gather'd honour;
Which he to seek of me again perforce,
Behoves me keep at utterance. Shakspeare.

Come, fate, into the list,
And champion me to th' utterance. Shakspeare.

3. Vocal expression; emission from the mouth.

Till Adam, though no less than Eve abus'd,
At length gave utterance to these words constrain'd. Milton.

Speaking is a sensible expression of the notions of the mind, by several intonations of utterance of voice, used as signs, having by consent several determinate significances. Holder.

There have been some inventions, which have been able for the utterance of articulate sounds, as the speaking of certain words. Withins.

UTTERER. n. f. [from utter.]

1. One who pronounces.

2. A divulger; a discloser.

Utters of secrets to no thence debar'd;
Babblers of folly, and blabbers of crime. Spenser.

3. A teller; a vender.

UTTERLY. adv. [from utter.] Fully; completely; perfectly. For the most part in an ill sense.

God, whose property is to show his mercies, then greatly, when they are nearest to be utterly despaired. Hooker.

Arguments taken from the authority of men, may not only to far truth as hath been declared, but further also, be of some force in human sciences; which force, be it never so small, doth show that they are not utterly naught. Hooker.

All your interest in those territories
Is utterly bereft you; all is lost. Shakspeare.

He was so utterly tired with an employment to contrary to his humour, that he did not consider the means that would lead him out of it. Clarendon.

There is no where any nation to utterly lost to all things of law and morality, as not to believe the existence of God. Withins.

While in the flesh, we cannot be utterly intelli-ble of the afflictions that befall us. Atterbury.

UTTERMOST. adj. [from utter.]

1. Extreme; being in the highest degree.

Whereon I live! thy gentle looks, thy aid,
Thy counsel, in this uttermost distress. Milton.

2. Most remote.

The land, from the uttermost end of the straits on Peru side, did go towards the south. Abbot.

UTTERMOST. n. f. The greatest.

There needed neither promise nor persuasion to make her do her uttermost for her father's service.
Sidney.

He cannot have sufficient honour done unto him,
but the uttermost we can do, we must. Hooker.

UTEROUS. adj. [from utero, Latin.]

The uterus coat, or iris, of the eye, hath a mucous power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it, called the pupil. Ray.

VULCANO. n. f. [Italian.] A burning mountain: it is commonly written after the Italian, vulcano.

Earth caldred fires off into the air; the ashes of burning mountains, in volcanos, will be carried to great distances. Arbuthnot.

VULGAR. adj. [vulgaire, French; vulgaris,
Latin.]

1. Plebeian; suited to the common people; practised among the common people.

Men who have passed all their time in low and vulgar life, cannot have a suitable idea of the several beauties and blessings in the actions of great men. Addison.

2. Vernacular; national.

It might be more useful to the English reader, who was to be his immediate care, to write in our vulgar language. Pell.

V U L

3. Mean; low; being of the common rate.

It requiring too great a sagacity for vulgar minds, to draw the line between virtue and vice, no wonder if most men attempt not a laborious scrutiny into things themselves, but only take names and words, and so rest in them. South.

Now wasting years my former strength confound,
And added woes have bow'd me to the ground;
Yet by the rubble you may guess the grain,
And mark the ruins of no vulgar man. Browne.

4. Publick; commonly bruited.

Do you hear aught of a battle toward? — —Molt rare, and vulgar, every one hears that. Shakspeare.

VULGAR. n. f. [vulgaire, Fr.] The common people.

I'll about;
Drive away the vulgar from the streets. Shakspeare.

Those men, and their adherents, were then looked upon by the sophisticated vulgar as greater protectors of their laws and liberties than myself. King Charles.

The most considering and wisest men, in all ages and nations, have constantly suffered from the vulgar in their thought. Withins.

The vulgar imagine the pretender to have been a child imposed upon the nation by the fraudulent zeal of his parents, and their bigotted counsellors. Swift.

VULGARISM. n. f. [from vulgar.] Gross-ness; meanness; vulgarity.

The great events of Greek and Roman fable and history, which early education, and the usual course of reading, have made familiar and interesting to all Europe, without being degraded by the vulgarity of ordinary life in any country. Reynolds.

VULGARITY. n. f. [from vulgar.]

1. Meanness; state of the lowest people.

Although their condition may place them many degrees above the multitude, yet are they still within the line of vulgarity and democratical enemies to truth. Brown.

True it is, and I hope I shall not offend their vulgarity if I say, they are daily mocked into error by deists. Brown.

2. Mean or gross mode.

Is the grandiloquence of Persius, and the sublimity of Juvenal, to be circumscribed with the meanness of words, and vulgarity of expression? Duden.

VULGARLY. adv. [from vulgar.] Commonly; in the ordinary manner; among the common people.

He was, which people much respect
In princes, and which pleases vulgarly,
Of goodly personage and of sweet aspect. Daniel.

He that believes himself incapable of pardon, goes on without thought of reforming; such an one we call vulgarly a desperate person. Hammond.

As it is vulgarly understood, that he cut a passage for his army through their mighty mountains, it may seem incredible. Brown.

VULNERABLE. adj. [vulnerable, Fr. vulnerabilis, Lat.] Susceptive of wounds;
liable to external injuries.

I let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests,
I bear a charmed life, which must not yield
To one of woman born. Shakspeare.

Achilles, though dipped in Styx, yet having his heel untouched by that water, although he were touched elsewhere, he was slain in that part, namely vulnerable in the interior and brutal part. Brown.

VULNERARY. adj. [vulnerarius, Fr. vul-nerarius, Lat.] Useful in the cure of wounds.

Try whether the same effect will not arise by common vulnerary balms. Proust.

I kept the office open, and presented him, viz.
vulnerary. Withins.

TO VULNERATE. v. a. [vulnero, Latin.]

To wound; to hurt.

There is an utterance between the magnetic agent and the vulnerable body. Glanville.

VULNERE. adj. [vulnus, Lat.] Belonging to a fox.

U V U

Vu'ture, n. f. [vultur, Lat.] A large bird of prey, remarkable for voracity. Nor the night raven, that still deadly yells, Nor greedy vultures, make us once afraid.

Spenser

We've willing dames enough, there cannot be That vulture is you, to devour in many As will to greatness dedicate themselves.

Shaksp.

A rav'nous vulture in his open'd side Her crooked beak and cruel talons tried.

Dryden.

Vu'turine, adj. [vulturinus, Lat.] Belonging to a vulture

Uvula, n. f. [uvula, Lat.] In anatomy,

Dict.

By an instrument bended up at one end, I got up behind the uvula.

Wijeman.

UXORIOUS, adj. [uxorius, Latin.] Submissively fond of a wife; infected with connubial dotage.

Towards his queen he was nothing uxorius, nor scarce indulgent; but companionable and respectful.

Huom.

That uxorius king, whose heart, though large,

U X O

Beguild by fair idolatresses, sold To idols foul.

Milton.

How wouldst thou insulk, When I must live uxorius to thy will In perfect thralldom! how again betray me!

Milton.

UXORIOUSLY, adv. [from uxorius.] With fond submission to a wife.

If thou art thus uxoriously inclin'd To bear thy bondage with a willing mind, Prepare thy neck.

Dryden.

UXORIOUSNESS, n. f. [from uxorius.] Connubial dotage; fond submission to a wife.

W.

W A D

W is a letter of which the form is not to be found in the alphabets of the learned languages; though it is not improbable that by our w is expressed the sound of the Roman v, and the Eolick f. Both the form and sound are excluded from the languages derived from the Latin. W is sometimes improperly used in diphthongs as a vowel for u; view, threw: the sound of w consonant, if it be a consonant, is uniform.

To WA'DDLE, v. n. [a low barbarous word.] To move from side to side; to change direction.

If in your work you find it waddle; that is, that one side of the flat inclines to the right or left hand, with soft blows of an hammer set it to rights, and then screw it hard up.

Mozon.

WAD, n. f. [peob, hay, Saxon.]

1. A bundle of straw or other loose matter thrust close together.

2. Wadd, or black lead, is a mineral of great use and value.

Woodward.

WADDING, n. f. [from wad, cad, Islandick.] A kind of soft stuff loosely woven, with which the skirts of coats are lined out.

To WA'DDLE, v. n. [wagg'helen, Dutch, to waggle; whence, by a casual corruption waddle.] To shake, in walking, from side to side; to deviate in motion from a right line.

She could have run and waddled all about.

Shakspere.

The strutting petticoat smooths and leels all distinctions, while I cannot but be troubled to see so many well-shaped, innocent virgins bloated up, and waddling up and down, like big-bellied women.

Spectator.

The farmer's goose, Grown fat with corn and sitting still, Can scarce get o'er the hard-door sill, And hardly waddles forth to cool Her belly at the neighbour's pool.

Swift.

Dulness, of business the dire-bug foul, To human heads like hogs to the bawl; Which, as more pond'rous, makes their aim more true, Obliquely waddling to the mark in view.

Pope.

W A D

She draws her word, and waddles in her pace; Unwailt her hands, and much besmaltt her face.

Young.

To WAD, v. n. [from vadum, Lat. pronounced vadum.]

1. To walk through the waters; to pass water without swimming.

Harte.

2. Deficiency.

This proceeded not from any want of knowledge,
but of judgment.

Dryden

One objection to Civita Vecchia is, that the air is not wholesome. this proceeds from want of inhabitants.

Addison.

The blood flows through the vessels, by the excess of the force of the heart above the incumbent pressure, which in fat people is excessive; and as want of a due quantity of motion of the fluids increaseth fat, the disease is the cause of itself.

Arbuthnot.

Wants of all kinds are made to frame a plan,
One learns to limp, another not to lee.

Young.

3. The state of not having.

You shall have no reason to complain of me, for want of a generous didam of this world.

Pope.

4. Poverty; penury; indigence.

Nothing is so hard for those who abound in riches, as to conceive how others can be in want.

Swift.

5. [prob, Saxon.] A mole.

A kind of hare resembling a want in his feet and a cat in his tail.

Hephia.

WANTON, adj. [This word is derived by Minsheu from want one, a man or woman that wants a companion. This etymology, however odd, Junius silently adopts. Skinner, who had more acuteness, cannot forbear to doubt it, but offers nothing better.]

1. Lascivious; libidinous; lecherous; lustful.

Thou art froward by nature, enemy to peace,
Lascivious, wanton, more than well becomes
A man of thy profession.

Shakespeare.

Entic'd to do him wanton rice.

Milton.

2. Licentious; dissolute.

My plentiful joys,
Wanton in fulness, seek to hide themselves
In drops of sorrow.

Shakespeare.

Men grown wanton by prosperity
Study'd new arts of luxury and ease.

Rowson.

3. Frolicksome; gay; sportive; airy.

As flies to wanton boys, we are to the gods;
They kill us for their sport.

Shakespeare.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds.

Shakespeare.

W A N

How eagerly ye follow my disgrace,
As if it led ye! and how sleek and wanton
Y' appear, in every thing may bring my ruin.

Shakespeare.

Time drives the flocks from field to fold;
The fowls do fade, and wanton fields
To wayward winter reckoning yields.

Raleigh.

4. Loose; unrestrained.
How does your tongue grow wanton in her praise!

Addison.

5. Quick and irregular of motion.
She has a well down to the slender waist
Her unadorned golden tresses wore,
Dishevel'd, but in wanton ringlets wav'd,
As the vine curls her tendrils.

Milton.

6. Luxuriant; superfluous.
What we by day lop overgrown,
One night or two with wanton growth derides,
Tending to wild.

Milton.

Women richly gay in gems and wanton drest.
7. Not regular; turned fortuitously.
The quaint makes in the wanton green,
For want of tread are undistinguishable.

Milton.

WA'NTON. n. f.
1. A lascivious person; a strumpet; a whoremonger.

To lip a wanton in a secure couch,
And to suppoise her chaste.

Shakespeare.

2. A trifler; an insignificant flatterer.

Shall a beardless boy,
A cocker'd, sicken wanton, brave your fields,
Mocking the air with colours idly spread,
And find no check?

Shakespeare.

Pats with your best violence;
I am afraid you make a wanton of me.

Shakespeare.

3. A word of slight endearment.
Peace, my wantons; he will do
More than you can aim unto.

Ben Jonson.

To WA'NTON. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To play lasciviously.

He from his guards and midnight tent
Disguis'd o'er hills and valleys went
To wanton with the sprightly dame,
And in his pleasure lost his fame.

Prior.

2. To revel; to play. In Otway it may be an adjective.

Oh! I heard him wanton in his praise;
Speak things of him might charm the ears.

Otway.

Nature here
Wanton'd as in her prime, and play'd at will
Her virgin fanciers.

Milton.

O ye muses! deign your blest retreat,
Where Horace wanton at your springs,
And Pindar sweeps a bolder string.

Fenton.

3. To move nimbly and irregularly.
WA'NTONLY. adv. [from wanton.] Lafciviously; frolicsomely; gayly; sport-tively; carelessly.

Into what sundry gyres her wonder'd self she throws,

And oft insides the shore, as wantonly she flows.

Drayton

Thou dost but try how far I can forbear,
Nor art that monster which thou wouldst appear.
But do not wantonly my passion move,
I pardon nothing that relates to love.

Dryden.

WA'NTONNESS. n. f. [from wanton.]
1. Lasciviousness; lechery.

The spirit of wantonness is fear'd out of him.

Shakespeare

Bulls and goats bled apace; but neither the violence of the one, nor the wantonness of the other,

over-died a victim at any of their altars.

South.

2. Sportiveness; frolic; humour.
As find as night,

Shakespeare.

Only for wantonness.
Love, rais'd on beauty, will like that decay;
Our hearts may bear its slender chain a day:

As flow'ry bands in wantonness are worn,
A morning's pleasure, and an evening torn.

Pope.

3. Licentiousness; negligence of restraint.
The tumults threaten'd to abuse all acts of grace, and turn them into wantonness.

King Charles.

W A R

Wantonness and pride
Raise out of friendship hostile deeds in peace.

Milton.

WA'NTWIT. n. f. [want and wit.] A fool;
an idiot.

Such a wanton sadness makes of me,
That I have much ado to know myself.

WA'NTY. n. f. [I know not whence derired.] A broad girth of leather, by which the load is bound upon the horse;

a surcingle.

A pannel and wanty, pack-saddle and ped,
With line to fetch liver.

Tusser.

WA'PED. adj. [Of this word I know not the original, except that to whape, to shock, or deject, is found in Spenser; from which the meaning may be gathered.] Dejected; crushed by misery.

This makes the waped widow weep again.

Shakf.

WA'PENTAKE. n. f. [from pepun, Saxon,
and take; wapentakium, wapentagium,
low Latin.]

Wapentake is all one with what we call a hundred: as, upon a meeting for that purpose, they touched each other's weapons, in token of their fidelity and allegiance.

Cowell.

Hundred signifieth a hundred pledges, which were under the command and assistance of their alderman; which, as I suppose, was also called a wapentake; so named of touching the weapon or spear of their alderman, and swearing to follow him faithfully, and serve their prince truly. But others think that a wapentake was ten hundreds, or boroughs.

Spenser.

WAR. n. f. [werre, old Dut. guerre, Fr.]

1. War may be defined the exercise of violence under sovereign command against withstanders; force, authority, and resistance, being the essential parts thereof.

Violence, limited by authority, is sufficiently distinguished from robbery, and the like outrages; yet, consisting in relation towards others, it necessarily requires a supposition of resistance, whereby the force of war becomes different from the violence inflicted upon slaves or yielding malefactors.

Ruleigh.

On, you noblest English,
Whole blood is fetcht from fathers of war proof

Shakespeare.

After a denunciation or indictment of war, the war is no more confined to the place of the quarrel, but left at large.

Bacon.

I twine the figure and armour of him that headed the peasants in the war upon them, with the several weapons found on his followers.

Addison.

2. The instruments of war, in poetical language.

The god of love inhabits there,
With all his rage, and dread, and grief, and care;
His complement of stores, and total war.

3. Forces; army. Poetically.
On th' embattled ranks the waves return,
And overwhelm the war.

Milton.

4. The profession of arms.
Thine almighty word leapt down from heaven, as a fierce man of war into the midst of a land of destruction.

Wisd.

5. Hostility; state of opposition; act of opposition.

Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out, Contenting 'gainst obedience, as they would Make war with man.

Shakespeare.

To WAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To make war; to be in a state of hostility.

Was this a face
To be expos'd against the warring winds?

Shakf.
Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle here within?
Make peace with God, for you must die, my lord.—

W A R

—Have you that holy fasting in your soul,
To counsel me to make my peace with God;
And are you yet to your own souls in blood,
That you will war with God by murdering me?

Shakespeare.

He teacheth my hands to war.
This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy,
that thou by them mightest war a good warfare.

1 Timothy.

He limited his forces, to proceed in aid of the Britons, but in no wise to war upon the French.

Bacon.

We seem ambitious God's whole work 'undo;
With new diseases on ourselves we war,
And with new physick, a worse engine far.

Donne.

His next design
Was all the Theban race in arms to join,
And war on Thebes.

Dryden.

To the island of Delos, hy being reckoned a sacred place, nations warring with one another resorted with their goods, and traded as in a neu-

Arbutnot.

tral country.
To WAR. v. a. To make war upon. Not used. In Spenser it is probably falsely printed for warraid.

And them long time before great Nimrod was,
That first the world with sword and fire warred.

Spenser.

To them the same was render'd, to the end,
To war the Scot, and borders to defend.

Daniel.

To WA'RBLE. v. a. [warben, old Teuto-nick; wervelen, German, to twirl, or turn round.]

1. To quaver any sound.
Fountains, and ye that warble as ye flow,
Melodious murmurs, warbling tune his praise.

Milton.

2. To cause to quaver.
Follow me as I sing,
And touch the warbled string.

Milton.

3. To utter musically.
She can thaw the numbing spell,
If she be right invok'd with warbled song.

Milton.

To WA'RBLE. v. n.
1. To be quavered.

Such strains as war warble in the linnet's throat.

Guy.

2. To be uttered melodiously.
A pleasing long plain singing voice requires,
For warbling notes from upward cheering flow.

Sidney.

There birds resort, and in their kind thy praise
Among the branches chant in warbling lays.

Wotton.

3. To sing.
Creatures that liv'd, and mov'd, and walk'd, or flow;

Birds on the branches warbling; all things smil'd.

Milton.

She warbled in her throat,
And tun'd her voice to mimic a merry note,
But indistinct.

Dryden.

A bird amid the joyous circle sings
High airs attemper'd to the vocal strings;
Whilst warbling to the varied strain advance
Two sprightly youths to form the bounding dance.

Pope.

WA'RBLE. n. f. [from warble.] A singer;
a songster.

Hark! on ev'ry bough,
In lulling strains, the feather'd warblers woo.

Tickel.

WARD. A syllable much used as an affix in composition, as acavenward, with tendency to heaven; hitherward, this way; from peapb, Saxon: it notes tendency to or from.

Before he could come to the arbour, the faw walking from her-ward a man in shepherd's ap-

Sidney.

To WARD. v. a. [wardian, Saxon; ward,
Dutch; garder, French.]

1. To guard; to watch.

WAR

He marched forth towards the castle wall,
Those gates he found left shut; no living sight
To ward the same, nor answer comers' call.
Spenser.

To defend; to protect.

Tell him it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers, bid him bury it. Shaksp.
To fence off; to obstruct or turn aside any thing mischievous. It is now used with off, less elegantly.

Not once the baron lift his armed hand
To strike the maid, but gazing on her eyes,
Where lordly Cupid seem'd in arms to stand,
To way to ward or than her blows he tries.
Fairfax.

Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again.
Daniel.

Toxens amass'd, and with amazement flow,
Or to revenge or ward the coming blow
Too doubting; and, while doubting thus he stood,
Received the steel bath'd in his brother's blood.
Dryden.

The pointed javelin warded off his rage Addison.
The provision of bread for food, clothing to ward off the inclemency of the air, were to be first looked after. Woodward.

It instructs the scholar in the various methods of warding off the force of objections, and of discovering and repelling the subtle tricks of sophisters.
Watts.

WARD. v. n.

To be vigilant; to keep guard.

To act upon the defensive with a weapon.

So redoubling her blows, drove the stranger to a other fluit than to ward and go back. Sidney.
Shout crooked swords in closer fight they wear,
and on their warding arms light bucklers bear.
Dryden.

WARD. n. f. [from the verb.]

Watch; act of guarding.

Still when the slept he kept both watch and ward.
Spenser.

Sublime on these a tow'r of steel is rear'd,
and dire Tiphoeus there keeps the ward;
Sirt in her sanguine gown, by night and day
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way.
Dryden.

Garrison; those who are intrusted to keep a place.

By reason of these two forts, though there be but mall wards left in them, there are two good towns-now grown, which are the greatest stay of both those two countries. Spenser.

The assidged castles ward their steadfast floods did mightily maintain Spenser.

Guard made by a weapon in fencing.
Then know'st my old ward; here I lay, and has I bore my point. Shakspere

Come from thy ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick. Shaksp.

Now by proof it shall appear,
Whether thy horns are sharper, or my spear.
At this I threw: for want of other ward.
He fitted up his hand his front to guard. Dryden.

Fortress; strong hold.

She dwells securely on the excellency of her honour. Now could I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her from the ward of her purity, her reputation, and thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me. Shakspere.

[warda. law Lat.] District of a town.

Throughout the trembling city plac'd a guard,
Dealing an equal share to every ward. Dryden.

Custody; confinement.

That wretched creature, bring deprehened in that impiety, was held in ward. Hooker.

Stop there was his too veh'ement speech with speed,
And he sent close to ward from whence he stood.
Daniel.

The part of a lock, which, corresponding to the proper key, hinders any other from opening it.

WAR

In the key-hole turns
Th' intricate wards, and ev'ry bolt and bar.
Milton.

As there are locks for several purposes, so are there several inventions in the making and contriving their wards, or guards. Mason.

The keys, as well as the locks, were fitted ward to ward by the same wisdom. Grew.

8. One in the hands of a guardian.

The king causeth bring up his wards, but befloweth no more of their rents upon them than is useful. Drummond.

You know our father's ward,
The fur Mounia. is your heart at peace?
Is it so guarded that you could not love her? Otwy.

Thy Violante's heart was ever thine,
Compell'd to wed before she was my ward Dryden.

When, stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden.

Titles of honour, and privileges, the rich and the great can never deserve, unless they employ them for the protection of these, the true wards and children of God. Sprat

9. The state of a child under a guardian.

I must attend his majesty's command, to whom
I am now in ward, evermore in subjection. Shaksp.

Lewis the eleventh of France having much abated the greatness and power of the peers, would say, that he had brought the crown out of ward.
Bacon.

10. Guardianship; right over orphans.

It is also inconvenient, in Ireland, that the wards and marriages of gentlemen's children should be in the disposal of any of those lords. Spenser.

WARDEN. n. f. [warden, Dutch.]

1. A keeper; a guardian.

2. A head officer.

The warden of apothecaries hall. Garth.

3. Warden of the cinque ports.

A magistrate that has the jurisdiction of those havens in the east part of England, commonly called the cinque ports, or five havens, who has there all that jurisdiction which the admiral of England has in places not exempt. The reason why one magistrate should be assigned to these havens seems to be, because, in respect of their situation, they formerly required a more vigilant care than other havens, being in greater danger of invasion by our enemies. Cowell

4. [pyram. vulcanum, Latin. I know not whence denominated.] A large pear.

Nor must all shoots of pears alike be let,
Crustumian, Syrian pears, and warden's grent.
May.

Ox-check when hot, and warden's bak'd, some
cry. King

WARDEN. n. f. [from ward.]

1. A keeper; a guard.

Upon those gates with force he fiercely flew,
And rending them in pieces, felly flew
Those warden's fringe, and all that else he met.
Spenser.

Where be these warden's, that they want not here?
Open the gates. Shakspere.

Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,

Though castles topple on their warden's heads.
Shakspere.

The warden's of the gate but scarce maintain
Th' unequal combat, and resist in vain. Dryden

2. A truncheon by which an officer of arms forbade fight.

Then, then, when there was nothing could have stand

My father from the breast of Bollingbroke,
O, when the king did throw his warden down,
His own life hung upon the staff he threw. Shaksp.

WARDMOT. n. f. [peapb and mot, or gemot, Sax. wardemotus, low Lat.] A meeting; a court held in each ward or district in London, for the direction of their affairs.

WARDROBE. n. f. [garderobe, Fr. garderobe, low Lat.] A room where clothes are kept.

WAR

The third had of their wardrobe custody,
In which were not rich tires nor garments gay.

The plumes of pride, and wings of vanity,
But cloaths meet to keep keen cold away. Spenser.

I will kill all his quans,
I'll murder all his wardrobe piece by piece,
Until I meet the king. Shakspere.

Behold,
What from his wardrobe her below'd allows,
To deck the wedding day of his unpotted spouse.
Dryden.

It would not be an impertinent design to make a kind of an old Roman wardrobe, where you should see togas and tunics, the chiburns and tra-bea, and all the different vests and ornaments so often mentioned in the Greek and Roman authors.
Addison.

WARDSHIP. n. f. [from ward.]

1. Guardianship.

By reason of the tenures in chief revived, the sums for respect homage he encreased, and the profits of wardships cannot but be much advanced. Bacon.

2. Pupillage; state of being under ward.

The houses freed out their tivity, and redeemed themselves from the wardship of tumults.
King Charles.

WARF. The pretext of wear, more frequently wore.

A certain man wore no cloaths. Lake.

WARE. adj. [for this we commonly say aware.]

1. Being in expectation of; being provided against.

The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not ware of him. Matthew.

2. Cautious; wary.

What man so wide, what warily wit so ware,
As to detect the crafty cunning him
By which deceit doth mask in vizor fair. Spenser.

Did he well be ware and full erect. Milieu.

TO WARE. v. n. To take heed of; to beware.

A shuffled, fullen, and uncertain light
That dances through the clouds, and flits again,
Then ware a rising tempest on the main. Dryden.

WARE. n. f. [papi, Sax. weare, Dutch;
wara, Swedish.] Commonly something to be sold.

Let us, like merchants, shew our foulest wares,
And think, perchance, they'll sell. Shakspere.

If the people bring ware or any victuals in sell,
that we would not buy it. Nichemiah.

I know thou whole art but a shop
Of toys and trifles, traps and snares,
To take the weak, and make them stop;
Yet not thou faster than thy wares. Ben Jonson.

Why should any black thy love impair?
Let the dark shop commend the ware. Cleveland.

London, that vents of false ware so much store,
In no ware deceives us more. Cowley.

He turns himself to other wares which he finds your markets take off. Locke.

WAREFUL. adj. [ware and full.] Cautious; timorously prudent.

WAREFULNESS. n. f. [from wareful.]
Cautiousness. Obsolete.

With pretence from Strephon her to guard,
He met her full; but full of warefulness. Sidney.

WAREHOUSE. n. f. [ware and house.] A storehouse of merchandise.

His understanding is only the warehouse of other men's lumber, I mean false and unconvincing rea-sonings, rather than a repository of truth for his own use. Locke.

She had never more ships at sea, greater quantities of merchandise in her warehouses, than at present.
Addison.

She the big warehouse built,
Ran'd the strong crane. Thomson.

WARELESS. adj. [from ware.] Uncau-tious; unwary. Spenser.

WARILY. adv. [from ware.] Warily;
cautiously; timorously.

WAR

They bound him hand and foot with iron chains,
And with continual watch did warily keep.

WARFARE, n. f. [war and fare.] Military service; military life; state of contest and solicitude.

In the wilderness

He shall first lay down the rudiments

Of his great warfare, ere I send him forth
To conquer sin and death

Paulina hath been your warfare, and of God

Accepted, fearless in his righteous cause

Tully, when he read the fates, was thinking on the war, which was his field of battle: the knowledge of warfare is thrown away on a general who does not make use of what he knows.

The state of Christians, even when they are not actually persecuted, is a perpetual state of warfare and voluntary sufferings

The scripture has directed us to refer their misfortunes on our Christian warfare to the power of three enemies.

To WARFARE. v. n. [from the noun.]

To lead a military life.

That was the only amulet, in that credulous war-faring age, to escape dangers in battles.

WARHABLE, adj. [war, and habile, from habilis, Lat. or able.] Military; fit for war.

The weary Britons, whose warhable youth

Was by Maximilian lately led away,

With wretches led naked and woful rattle,

Were to those Pugins made an open prey.

WARILY, adv. [from wary.] Cautiously; with timorous prudence; with wife forethought.

The charge thereof unto a courteous frute

Commended was, who thereby did attend,

And warily awaited day and night,

From other covetous heads it to defend.

The change of laws, especially concerning matters of religion, must be warily proceeded in.

So rich a prize could not to warily be forced,

but that Portuguese, French, English, and now at late the Low Country men, have had in their own barns part of the Spaniards harvest.

They searched diligently, and concluded warily

It will concern a man to treat confidence awfully and warily, by still observing what it commands, but especially what it forbids

WARINESS, n. f. [from wary.] Caution; prudent forethought; timorous scrupulousness.

For your own conscience he gives innocence,

But for your fame a discreet wariness.

It will deserve our special care and wariness to deliver our thoughts in this manner.

To determine what are little things in religion,
great wariness is to be used.

The path was so very slippery, the shade to exceeding gloomy, and the whole wood to full of echoes, that they were forced to march with the greatest wariness, circumspection, and silence.

Men have too much of all nature, or of all weakness, as not to loath the vanity of the ambitious man.

I look upon it to be a most clear truth, and expected it with more wariness and reserve than was necessary.

WARK, n. f. [anciently used for work;
whence bulwark.] Building.

Thou findest work where any's to be found,

And buldest strong work upon a weak ground

WARLIKE, adj. [war and like.]

1. Fit for war; disposed to war.

She doing so strange, and yet so well succeeding temper made her people by peace warlike.

Old Sward with ten thousand warlike men,

All ready at appoint, was setting forth.

When a warlike state grows soft and effeminate,
they may be sure of a war.

O imprudent Gauls,

Relying on false hopes, thus to incense

The warlike English.

WAR

2. Military; relating to war.

The great arch-angel from his warlike toil

Success'd.

WARLING, n. f. [from war.] This word is I believe only found in the following adage, and seems to mean, one often quarrelled with.

Better be an old man's darling than a young man's warling.

WARLOCK, n. f. [wardlook, Islandick,

a charm; peplo, Saxon, an evil spirit. This etymology was communicated by Mr. Hysc.] A male witch; a wizzard.

Warlock in Scotland is applied to a man whom the vulgar suppose to be convertant with spirits, as a woman who carries on the same commerce is called a witch: he is supposed to have the invul-nerable quality which Dryden mentions,

who did not understand the word.

He was no warlock, as the Scots commonly call such men, who they say are iron free or lead free.

WARM, adj. [warm, Gothick; peppin, Saxon; warm, Dutch.]

1. Not cold, though not hot; heated to a small degree.

He stretched himself upon the child, and the flesh of the child waxed warm.

Man's ocean flow'd not idle, but with warm

Proflück humour fort'ning all her globe.

We envy not the warmer clime that lies

In ten degrees of more indulgent skies.

2. Zealous; ardent.

I never thought myself so warm in any party's cause as to deceive their money.

Each worm with springs mutual from the heart

Scalger in his poetries is very warm against it.

3. Habitually passionate; ardent; keen.

4. Violent; furious; vehement.

Welcome day-light; we shall have warm work

on't:

The Moor will rage

His utmost forces on his next assault,

To win a queen and kingdom.

5. Busy in action; heated with action.

I hate the bustling humours to attend,

Death all at once would be a nobler end;

Fate is unkind methinks a general

Should warm, and at the head of armies fall.

6. Fanciful; enthusiastic.

It there be a sober and a wise man, what difference will there be between his knowledge and that of the most extravagant fancy in the world? If there be any difference between them, the advantage will be on the warm-headed man's side, as having the more ideas, and the more lively.

7. Vigorous; sprightly.

Now warm in youth, now with'ring in thy blooin,

Lost in a convent's solitary gloom.

To WARM. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To free from cold; to heat in a gentle degree.

It shall be for a man to burn, for he shall take thereof and warm himself.

The mounted sun

Shot down direct his fervid rays, to warm

Earth's inmost womb.

These soft fires, with kindly heat

Of various influence, foment and warm.

2. To heat mentally; to make vehement.

The action of Homer being more full of vigour than that of Virgil, is more pleasing to the reader;
one warms you by degrees, the other sets you on fire
all at once, and never intermits his heat.

To WARM. v. n. To grow less cold.

These shall not be a coal to warm at, nor fire to sit before it.

WAR

WARWINGPAN, n. f. [warm and pan.]
A covered brass pan for warming a bed
by means of hot coals.

WARWINGSTONE, n. f. [warm and stone.]

To stones add the warming stone, digged in Cornwall, which being well heated at the fire retains warmth a great while,

and hath been found to give ease in the internal hæmorrhoids.

WARMLY, adv. [from warm.]

1. With gentle heat.

There the warming ion first warmly smote

The open field.

2. Eagerly; ardently.

Now I have two right honest wives;

One to Atides I will send,

And t'other to my Trojan friend;

Each prince shall thus with honour have

What both so warmly seem to crave.

The ancients expect you should do them right in the account you intend to write of their characters.

I hope you think more warmly than ever of that design.

WARMLY, n. f. [from warm.]

1. Gentle heat.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my goal,

from the loathed warmth whercof deliver me.

Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun increasing than the hot herbs have; as a cold hand will sooner find a little warmth than an hot.

He vital virtue infus'd, and vital warmth,

Throughout the fluid masts,

Here kindly warmth their mounting juice ferments,

The nobler tastes, and more exalted scents.

2. Zeal; passion; fervour of mind.

What warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely tutors that are already come?

Our duties towards God and man we should perform with that unteigned integrity which belongs to Christian piety; with that temper and sobriety which becomes Christian produce and clarity; with that warmth and affection which agrees with Christian zeal.

Your opinion, that it is entirely to be neglected, would have been my own, had it been my own case; but I felt more warmth here than I did when first I saw his book against myself.

The best patriots, by terming with what warmth and zeal the smallest corruptions are defended, have been wearied into silence.

3. Fancifulness; enthusiasm.

The same warmth of head disposes men to both

To WARN. v. a. [pannian, Saxon; uarnnen, Dutch; uarna, Swedish; varna, Islandick.]

1. To caution against any fault or danger; to give previous notice of ill.

What, dost thou scorn me for my gentle council?

And saith the devil that I warn thee from?

The hand can hardly lift up itself high enough to strike, but it must be seen, so that it warns while it threatens; but a false insidious tongue may whisper a lie so close and low, that though you have ears to hear, yet you shall not hear.

Joturna warns the Dauman chief

Of Lausus' danger, urging swift relief.

He had chidden the rebellious winds for obeying the command of their usurping master; he had bested down warned them from the seas; he had bested down the billows.

If we consider the mistakes in men's disputes and notions, how great a part is owing to words, and their uncertain or mistaken significations; this we are the more carefully to be warned of, because the arts of improving it have been made the business of men's study.

The father, whilst he warn'd his erring son

The sad examples which he ought to show

Defen'd.

When first young Maro sung of kings and wars,
Ere warning Phœbus touch'd his trembling ears,
Perhaps he seem'd above the critic's law,
And but from nature's fountains scorn'd to draw.

Pope

2. To admonish of any duty to be performed, or practice or place to be avoided or forsaken.

Cornelius was warn'd from God, by an holy angel, to fend for thee.

Acts

3. To inform previously of good or bad.

He wonders to what end you have assembled
Such troops of citizens to come to him,
His grace not being warn'd thereof before.

Shakespeare

He charg'd the soldiers, with preventing cure
Their flags to follow, and their arms prepare,
Warn'd of th' ensuing light, and bade 'em hope the war.

Dryden

Man, who knows not hearts, should make examples,
Which like a warning-piece must be shot off,
To fright the rest from crime.

Dryden

4. Milton put no preposition before the thing.

Our first parents had been warn'd
The coming of their secret foe, and scap'd
His mortal snare.

Paradise Lost

WAR'NING, n. f. [from warn.]

1. Caution against faults or dangers; previous notice of ill.

I will thank the Lord for giving me warning in the night.

Psalms

He, groaning from the bottom of his breast,
This warning in these mournful words express'd.

Dryden

Here wretched Phlegias warns the world with cries,
Could warning make the world more just or wise.

Dryden

You have fairer warning than others who are Unexpectedly cut off, and to have a better opportunity, as well as greater engagements, to provide for your latter end.

Baker

A true and plain relation of my misfortunes may be of use and warning to credulous minds, never to put too much trust in decaying men.

Swift

2. Previous notice: in a sense indifferent.

Suppose he have a more leisurely death, if at some date give him warning of its approach, yet perhaps he will not understand that warning, but will still flatter himself, as very often sick people do with hopes of life to the last.

Duty of Man

Death called up an old man, and bade him come, the man excus'd himself, that it was a great journey to take upon so short a warning.

L'Estrange

I saw, with time did not, more nonsense than either I or as bad a poet, could have crammed into it at a month's warning, at which time it was wholly written.

Dryden

WARP, n. f. [pearp, Sax. werp, Dutch.]

That order of thread in a thing woven that crosses the woof.

The placing of the tangle parts in length or transverse, as it is in the warp and the woof of texture, more inward or more outward.

Bacon

To WARP, v. n. [pearp, Sax. werpen, Dutch, to throw; whence we sometimes say, the work warps.]

1. To change from the true situation by intestine motion; to change the position of one part to another.

This fellow will but join you together as they are wadded, then one of you will prove a shank pine, and, like green timber, warp.

Shakespeare

They clasp one piece of wood to the end of another piece, to keep it from casting or warping.

Moxon

2. To lose its proper course or direction.

There's our commission
From which we would not have you warp.

Shakespeare

This is strange! methinks
My favour here begins to warp.

Shakespeare

All attest this doctrine, that the Pope can give away the right of any sovereign, if he shall never to little warp.

Dryden

This we should do as directly as may be, with as little warping and declension towards the creature as is possible.

Nares

3. To turn. I know not well the meaning here.

The potent rod
Of Amram's son, in Egypt's evil day
Way'd round the coast, up call'd a puffy cloud
Of locusts warping on the eastern wind,
That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung
Like night.

Milton

To WARP, v. a.

1. To contract; to shrivel.

2. To turn aside from the true direction.

This bet avow'd, nor folly warp'd my mind;
Nor the bad texture of the female kind
Betray'd my virtue.

Dryden

Not foreign or domestic treachery
Could warp thy soul to their unjust decree.

Dryden

A great argument of the goodness of his cause, which required in its defender zeal, to a degree of warmth able to warp the sacred rule of the word of God.

Locke

I have no private considerations to warp me in this controversy, since my first entering upon it.

Addison

Not warp'd by passion, aw'd by rumour,
Nor grove through pride, or gay through folly;
An equal mixture of good-humour,
And sensible soft melancholy.

Swift

A constant watchfulness against all those prejudices that might warp the judgment aside from truth.

Watts

Aristotle's moral, rhetorical, and political writings, in which his excellent judgment is very little warp'd by logical subtleties, are far the most useful part of his philosophy.

Butler

3. It is used by Shakespeare to express the effect of fiolt.

Freeze, freeze thou bitter sky,
Thou dost not bite to nigh
As benefits forgot
Though thou the waters warp,
Thy sting is not so sharp
As friends remember'd not.

As you like it

To WAR'NT, v. n. [garantir, Fr.]

1. To support or maintain; to attest.

She needed not disdain my service, though never so mean, which was war'nt by the fact of name of father.

Sidney

He that is clothed unto us the scriptures delivereth all the myriads of faith, and not any thing among them all more than the mouth of the Lord doth war'nt.

Hooker

It is this internal light be conformable to the principles of reason, or to the word of God, which is attested revelation, reason war'nts it, and we may safely receive it for true.

Locke

2. To give authority.

Now we'll together, and the chance of goodness
Be like our war'nted quarrel.

Shakespeare

3. To justify.

How can any one war'nt himself in the use of those things against such suspicions, but in the truth he has in the common honesty and truth of men in general?

S. ult.

True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
That justice war'nts and that wisdom guides;
All else is tow'ring frenzy and distraction.

Addison

4. To exempt; to privilege; to secure.

If my coming, whom the fact, he feared, as soon as he knew me by the armour, had not war'nted her from that near approaching cruelty.

Sidney

These thoughts cannot, in this year loneliness, war'nt you from suspicion in others, nor defend you from melancholy in yourself.

Sidney

I'll war'nt him from drowning.

Shakespeare

In a place
Less war'nted than this, or less secure,
I cannot be, that I should fear to change it.

Milton

5. To declare upon surety.

What a galled neck have we here! Look ye, mine's as smooth as silk, I war'nt ye.

L'Estrange

The Moor king

Is safe enough, I war'nt him for one.

Dryden

WAR'NT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A writ conferring some right or authority.

Are you now going to dispatch this deed?
—We are, my lord, and go to have the war'nt.

Hooker

4. A justificatory commission.

Is this a war'nt sufficient for any man's confidence to build such proceedings upon, as have been and are put in use for the establishment of that cause?

Hooker

When at any time they either wilfully break any commandment, or ignorantly mistake it, that is no war'nt for us to do likewise.

Kettwell

5. Attestation.

The place of paradise might be seen unto Moses, and unto the prophets who succeeded him, both which I take for my war'nt to guide me in this discovery.

Raleigh

His war'nt does the christian faith defend;
On that relying, all their quarrels end.

Waller

The Jewish religion was yet in possession, and therefore, that this might be enter us not to intrude, it was to bring its war'nt from the same hand of Omnipotence.

South

6. Right; legality. Obsolete.

I attach the
For an abuser of the world, a practitioner
Of mis inhabited and out of war'nt.

Shakespeare

Therefore to honor,
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
Put this away—there's war'nt in that theft,
Which fills itself when there's no mercy left.

Shakespeare

WAR'NTABLE, adj. [from war'nt.]

Justifiable; defensible.

To purchase a clear and war'ntable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know.

Roman

He is not a saint and short, his employment war'ntable, he is certain and it is long.

South

If I am ment my condition by any war'ntable industry, the way is far and open; and that's a privilege every reasonable creature has in his constitution.

L'Estrange

WAR'NTABLENESS, n. f. [from war'ntable.]

Justifiableness.

By the fact, that you may see the nobleness of his desire to you, and the *war'ntable*ness of your favour to me.

Sidney

WAR'NTABLY, adv. [from war'ntable.]

Justifiably.

The faith which God requires is only this, that he will certainly reward all those that believe in him, and obey his commandments, but for the particular application of this faith to ourselves, that deserves no more of our assent, nor can we war'ntably have it, than what is founded upon the serious consideration of our own performances.

Wake

WAR'NTER, n. f. [from war'nt.]

1. One who gives authority.

2. One who gives security.

himself and his heirs, to secure him and his heirs against all men, for the enjoying of any thing agreed of between them.

Cowell.

2. Authority; justificatory mandate.

Her obsequies have been so far enlarg'd
As we have warranty: her death was doubtful;
And, but that great command o'erflows the order,
She should in ground unsanctify'd have lodg'd
Till the last trumpet. Shakespeare.

In the use of those epithets we have the warranty and consent of all the churches, since they ever had a liturgy. Taylor.

If they disobey any precept, that is no excuse to us, nor gives us any warranty, for company's sake, to disobey likewise. Kettwell.

3. Security.

Every one cannot distinguish between fine and mixed silver: those who have had the care and government of politick societies, introduced coinage as a remedy; the stamp was a warranty of the publick, that under such a denomination they should receive a piece of such a weight and fineness. Locke.

To WARRA'Y. v. a. [from war; or from guerroyer, old Fr.] To make war upon.

boys. Shakspere.

A watchword every minute of the night given about the walls, to testify their vigilance. Spenser.

WATER, n. f. [water, Dutch; potter, Saxon.]

1. Sir Isaac Newton defines water, when pure, to be a very fluid salt, volatile, and void of all savour or taste; and it seems to consist of small, smooth, hard, porous, spherical particles, of equal diameters, and of equal specific gravities, as Dr. Cheyne observes; and also that there are between them spaces so large, and ranged in such a manner, as to be pervious on all sides. Their smoothness accounts for their sliding easily over one another's surfaces; their sphericity keeps them also from touching one another in more points than one; and by both these their friction in sliding over one another is rendered the least possible. Their hardness accounts for the incompressibility of water, when it is free from the intermixture of air. The purity of water is so very great, that there is at least forty times as much space as matter in it; for water is nineteen times specifically lighter than gold, and consequently rarer in the same proportion. Quincy.

My mildness hath allay'd their swelling griefs,
My meekness dry'd their water-flowing tears. Shaksp.

Your water is a fore decay of your whorl dead body. Shakspere.

The sweet manner of it forc'd
Those waters from me, which I would have stopp'd,
But I had not so much of man in me;
But all my mother came into mine eyes,
And gave me up to tears. Shakspere.

Men's evil manners live in brass, their virtues
We write in water. Shakspere.

Those healths will make thee and thy flesh look ill, Timon; here's that which is too weak to be a

Since the her interest for the nation's weal,
Than I, who wav'd the king, the nation sav'd. Dryden.

If my had a better right, they were content to wave it, and recognize the right of the other. Dryden.

To WAVE. v. n. [papian, Sax.]

1. To play to and fro; to move loosely. Walton.

I took two magicians, a glass, and one of them being kept fast in the same posture, that the one propied on the floor might not wave, I sat on the same floor another man, with another prism, moving it to and fro. Dryden.

The whitening flower descends,
At full their waving. Shakespeare.

2. To be unsettled; to be uncertain or inconsistent; to fluctuate; not to be determined. Walton.

In which amazement when the miscreant
Perceiv'd him to wave, weak and frail,
Wish'd to adding honour did his confidence draw,
And to his anguish I his soul sav'd. Shakespeare.

Remember where we are;
In France, among a fickle wavering nation. Shakespeare.

Flou almost wak'd me wave in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals use themselves
Into the trunks of men. Shakespeare.

Hold fast the faith without wavering. Shakespeare.

The wavering faith of people vain and light. Dryden.

Faith is absolutely determines our minds, and as perfectly excludes all wavering, as our knowledge is itself, and we may as well doubt of our own being, as we can whether any revelation from God be true. Locke.

What if Hofmannian should have said, that Luther waver'd in the point of the Incarnate? does it follow that he really did so? Attwood.

They, who at this distance from the first rule of the gospel, after weighing the several evidences of it, waver in their faith, would have waver'd though they had seen the first pronouncers work wonders. Attwood.

3. To totter; to be in danger of falling. Walton.

Has any disloyalty dared to feign that religion wavers? They foolishly mistake; as commonly they do, that are more cunning in other men's lives than in their own, 'tis not religion wavers, but their loyalty. Hobbes.

WAV'ER. n. f. [from water.] One unsettled and irresolute. Walton.

Come, young waverer, come, and go with me;
In one respect I'll thy assistant be. Shakespeare.

WAVY. adj. [from wave.]

1. Riling in waves. Walton.

In safe conduct of these Did thirty hollow-bottom'd barks divide the wavy seas. Chapman.

For thee the ocean smiles, and smooths her wavy breast;
And heav'n itself with more serene and purer light is blest. Dryden.

2. Playing to and fro, as in undulations. Walton.

WAX

Where full-eared sheaves of rye Grow waxy on the tilth, that soil select For apples. Philips.

good reason, observes the waxing and waning of the moon. Hakewill.

They wax and wane
Twixt thrift and penny. Cree.

2. To pass into any state; to become; to grow. It is in either sense now almost disused.

Where things have been instituted, which, being convenient and good at the first, do afterward in process of time wax otherwise, we make no doubt but they may be altered, yea, though counsels or customs general have received them. Hobbes.

Cæsar's the man from wax, and his wit weak
Was overcome of things that did him please. Spenser.

Art thou like the adder waxen deal? Shakespeare.
We will destroy this place; because the cry of it is waxen great before the Lord. Genesis.

Flowers removed wax greater, because the nourishment is more easily come by in the loose earth.
Bacon.

This answer given, Argantes wild drew near,
Trembling for ire, and waxing pale for rage;
Nor could he hold. Fairfax.

WAY

If I were but cold in my desire,
Think hear'n hath motion lost, and the world fire. Donne.

Their manners wax more and more corrupt, in proportion as their blessings abound. Atterbury.

WAXCHANDLER. n. f. [from wax and
chandler.] A maker of wax candles.

WAXEN. adj. [from wax.] Made of wax.

The female bee, that feeds her husband drone Deliciously, and buds her waxen cells,
With honey stor'd. Milton.

I can yet smelt beams, whose heat can melt
The waxen wings of this ambitious boy. Denham.

So waxy bees in little cells repose,
But it might robbers hit the well-wax'd hive.

An humming through them a city grows,
And out upon each other's wings they drive. Dryden.

WAY. n. f. [pa, way, Sax-on; wech, Dutch.]

1. The road in any travels. This word is applied in many relations which seem unlike one another, but have all the original of road or travel, noting either progression, or the mode of progression, local or intellectual.

I am amaz'd, and lose my way
Among the thorns and dangers of this world. Shakespeare.

You cannot see your way —
I have no way, and therefore want no eyes:
I stumbled when I saw. Shakespeare.

To God's eternal house direct the way,
A broad and ample road. Milton.

Flattering the god, and weeping said,
Pity poor Cupid, generous maid!
Who happen'd, being blind, to stray,
And on thy bosom lost his way. Prior.

2. Road made for passengers.
Know'st thou the way to Dover? —
—Both stile and gate, horse-way, and foot-path. Shakespeare.

Attending long in vain, I took the way
Which the sheep-path but scarcely print'd lay. Dryden.

3. A length of time.
Time and top it extends a great way, wherein so many deer, wild wars, loves, wolves, and bears. Brown.

An old man, that had travelled a great way under a huge burden, knock'd to weary, that he called upon death to receive him. Leibniz.

4. Course; direction of motion; local tendency.

I now go toward him, therefore follow me,
And mark what way he takes. Shakespeare.

Come a little nearer this way, I want the conveyance. Shakespeare.

He stood in the gate, and ask'd of every one
Which way the truck, and whence the way was. Dryden.

With downward faces he took his way,
And red his yellow flukes to the town. Dryden.

My seven have for this in one fatal day,
To death's dark mansion took the mortal way. Dryden.

and that he was to make his way by his own industry. Speelman.

6. Passage; power of progression made or given.

Back do I take the creature to thy head:
This word of mine shall give thee instant way,
Where they shall rest no more. Shakespeare.

The ancient chairs,
On each hand, put to his speed gave way. Milton.

Through all the empire road,
Youth and vain confidence thy life betray:
Through narrow this he made his way. Ball.

The sun may be, that men to him come into those paths till after forty, about which time the natural heat beginning to decay, makes way for those distempers. Temple.

The air could not readily get out of those prisons, but by degrees, as the earth and water above would give way. Burnet.

WAY

As a soldier, foremost in the fight,
Makes way for others. Dryden.

Some make themselves way, and are suggested to the mind by all the ways of sensation and reflection. Locke.

7. Vacancy made by timorous or respectful recession.

There would be left no difference between truth and falsehood, if what we certainly know give way to what we may possibly be mistaken in. Locke.

Nor was he satisfied, unless he made the pure profession of the gospel give way to superstition and idolatry, wherever he had power to expel the one, and establish the other. Atterbury.

The senate, forced to yield to the tribunes of the people, thought it their wit to give way who to the time. Suift.

I would give way to others, who might argue very well upon the same subject. Suift.

my way, with some foreign pounce, I would turn private. Raleigh.

12. Sphere of observation.

These inquiries were never without baseness, and very often led to the cautious inquirer. For men stand upon their guards against them, laying all their counsels and secrets out of their way. Bayly.

The general officers and the publick numbers that fell in my way, were generally subject to the point. Temple.

13. Means; mediate instrument; intermediate step.

By noble means we conquer will prepare;
First offer peace, and that refus'd, make war. Dryden.

What conceivable means are there, when by no should come to be assured that there is such a being as God? Tillotson.

A child has in them a well-interested way in progress, that he knows the limits of the four parts of the world. Locke.

It is not impossible to God to make a creature with more ways to convey into the understanding the notions of corporeal things, than there five he has given to man. Locke.

14. Method; scheme of management.

He didn't take upon a way again at them, and as hard it was to take a to them, he being to continually follow it by the hills, and every way abridg'd

1. State of the air, respecting either cold or heat, wet or dryness.

Who 's there, besides foul weather?—One manded like the weather, most unquietly. Shakspeare.

I am far better born than is the king;
 But I must make fair weather yet a while,
 Till Henry be more weak, and I more strong. Shakspeare.

Again the northern winds may fling and plow,
 And fear no haven but from the weather now. Cowley.

Men must content themselves to travel in all weathers, and through all difficulties. L'Estrange.
 The sun

Foretels the change of weather in the skies;
 Whence'er through mists he shoots his fullen beams,
 Suspect a drizzling day. Dryden.

2. The change of the state of the air.

It is a reverend thing to see an ancient castle not in decay; how much more to behold an ancient family, which have stood against the waves and weathers of time? Baron.

3. Tempest; storm.
 What gusts of weather from that gath'ring cloud
 My thoughts preface! Dryden.

TO WEATHER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To expose to the air.
 He perched on some branch thereby,
 To weather him, and his moist wings to dry. Spenser.

Mustard-seed gather for being too ripe,
 And weather it wel, yer ye give it a stripe. Tusser.

2. To pass with difficulty.
 He weather'd tell Charybdis, but ere long
 The skies were darken'd, and the tempests strong. Garth.

Could they weather and stand the shock of an eternal duration, and yet be at any time subject to a dissolution? Hale.

3. To WEATHER a point. To gain a point against the wind; to accomplish against opposition.

We have been tugging a great while against the stream, and have almost weathered our point; a stretch or two more will do the work. Addison.

4. To WEATHER out. To endure.
 When we have pass'd these gloomy hours,
 And weather'd out the storm that beats upon us. Addison.

WEATHERBEATEN. adj. Harassed and seasoned by hard weather.

They perceived an aged man and a young, both poorly arrayed, extremely weatherbeaten; the old man blind, the young man leading him. Sidney.
 She enjoys sure peace for evermore,
 As weatherbeaten ship arriv'd on happy shore. Spenser.

Thrice from the banks of Wye,
 And landy-bottom'd Severn, have I sent Him bootless home, and weatherbeaten back. Shakspeare.

I hope, when you know the worst, you will at once leap into the river, and swim through handsomely, and not weatherbeaten with the divers blasts of irresolution, stand shivering upon the brink. Suckling.

A weatherbeaten vessel holds Gladly the port. Milton.

Dido receiv'd his weatherbeaten troops. Dryden.
 The old weatherbeaten soldier carries in his hand
 the Roman eagle. Addison.

WEATHERBOARD, or Weatherbow. n. f.
 In the sea language, that side of a ship that is to the windward. Dict.

WEATHERCOCK. n. f. [weather and cock.]

1. An artificial cock set on the top of a spire, which by turning shows the point from which the wind blows.

But, alas! the sun keeps his light, though thy faith be darken'd; the rocks stand full, though thou change like a weathercock. Sidney.

A knightrill hauged by the bill, converting the breast to that point of the horizon from whence the wind doth blow, is a very strange introducing of natural weathercocks. Brown.

2. Any thing fickle or inconstant.

Where had you this pretty weathercock?—I cannot tell: what his name is my husband had him
 of. Shakspeare.

He break my promise and absolve my vow!
 The word which I have given shall stand like fate,
 Not like the king's, that weathercock of state. Dryden.

WEATHERDRIVEN. part. Forced by storms or contrary winds.

Philip, during his voyage towards Spain, was weatherdriven into Weymouth. Carew.

WEATHERGAGE. n. f. [weather and gage.] Any thing that shows the weather.

To vere and tack, and flee a cause
 Against the weathergauge of laws. Hudibras.

WEATHERGLASS. n. f. [weather and glass.]

1. A barometer; a glass that shows the weight of the air.

John's temper depended very much upon the air; his spirits rose and fell with the weatherglass. Arbuthnot.

We shall hardly wish for a perpetual equinox to save the charges of weatherglasses; for the two equinoxes of our year are the most windy and tempestuous. Bentley.

2. A thermometer. Less used.

As in some weatherglass my love I hold,
 Which falls or rises with the heat or cold,
 I will be constant yet. Dryden.

WEATHERSPY. n. f. [weather and spy.]

A stargazer; an astrologer; one that foretels the weather.

And sooner may a gulling weather-spy,
 By drawing forth heav'n's scheme, tell certainly
 What fashion'd hats, or ruffs, or suits, next year
 Our giddy-headed antick youth will wear. Donne.

WEATHERWISE. adj. [weather and wise.]
 Skillful in foretelling the weather.

WEATHERWISER. n. f. [weather, and wiser, Dutch, to show.] Any thing that foreshows the weather.

Most vegetables expand their flowers and down in warm sunbiny weather, and again close them toward the evening, or in rain, as is in the flowers of pimpernel, the opening and shutting of which are the countryman's weatherwiser. Derham.

TO WEAVE. v. a. pres. wove, weaved;
part. wove, weaved. [pepan, Sax.
woven, Dutch.]

1. To form by texture; to form by inserting one part of the materials within another.

Here in her hairs
 The painter plays the spider, and hath woven
 A golden mesh to intrap the hearts of men;
 Fuller than guits in cobwebs. Shakspeare.
 The women weave hangings for the grove. 2 Kings.

There our secret thoughts unceas
 Like nets be weav'd and interwiv'd,
 Wherewith we catch other's mind. Carow.
 White seem'd her robes, yet wove so they were,
 As snow and gold together had been wrought. Dryden.

Their purple vests were weav'd by Dardan dames. Dryden.

Dan Pope, for thy misfortune griev'd,
 With kind concern and skill has weav'd
 A silken web, and ne'er shall fade
 Its colours; gently has he laid
 The mantle o'er thy sad distress:
 And Venus shall the texture bless. Prior.

2. To unite by intermixture.

When religion was woven into the civil government, and flourished under the protection of the em-perors, men's thoughts and discourses were full of secular affairs, but in the three first centuries of christianity, men who embraced this religion had given up all their interests in this world, and lived in a perpetual preparation for the next. Addison.

3. To interpose; to insert.

The duke be here to-night! the better! best!
 This weaves itself perforce into my business. Shakspeare.

TO WEAVE. v. n. To work with a loom.

WEAVER. n. f. [from weave.] One who makes thread into cloth.

Upon these taxations,
 The clothiers all, not able to maintain
 The many to them longing, have put off
 The spinners, carders, tilters, weavers. Shakspeare.

My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope. Jub.
 The weaver may cast religion upon what loom
 he please. Moor.

W E D

Her flag aloft spreads calling to the wind,
And fanning fire-embers from the flood to fire;
The weaver, charmed with what his loom designed.

Goes on to feed, and knows not to retire. Dryden.
WIAVERKESB. n. f. [arancus pifivis, Lat.]
A rib. Anjcauth.

WEB. n. f. [pebba, Sax.]
1. Texture; any thing woven.
Penelope, for her Ulysses' sake,
Devis'd a web her woe to deceive;
In which she wove that the all day did make,
The same at night she did again unweave. Spenser.
She sat at gate,
And heard within the middlest elevate
A voice divine, as if her web she wrought,
Subtle, and glorious, and past earthly thought.

Spiders touch'd, feel their web's inmost part. Chapman.
By day the web and loom,
And homely household task, shall be her do. Darwin.

The fates, when they this happy web have spun,
Shall bless the sacred clue, and bid it smoothly run. Dryden.

2. Some part of a sword. Obsolete.
The sword, whereof the web was steel;
Pommel, rich stone, hilt, gold, approv'd by touch. Farfax.

3. A kind of dusky film that hinders the sight; falsification.
This is the foul libertigibbet; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hore-lip. Shakespeare.

WEBBED. adj. [from web.] Joined by a film.

Such as are whole footed, or whose toes are webbed together, their legs are generally short, the most convenient size for swimming. Darham.

WEBFOOTED. adj. [web and foot.] Pal-mipede; having films between the toes.
Webfooted fowls do not live constantly upon the land, nor fear to enter the water. Ray.

WEBSTER. n. f. [pebwepe, Sax. a woman-weaver.] A weaver. Obsolete.
After local names, the most in number have been derived from occupations, as, Taylor, Webster, Wheeler. Cumden.

To WED. v. a. [pebian, Sax.]

1. To marry; to take for husband or wife.
If one by one you wedd'd all the world,
Or, from the all that are, took something good
To make a perfect woman; the you kill'd
Would be unparalleled. Shakespeare.

Never did thy beauty, since the day
I saw thee first, and wedd'd thee, adorn'd
With all perfection, so inflame my fanks. Milton.
Chloe, blind to wit and worth,
Weds the rich dabbles of some son of earth. Pope.

2. To join in marriage.
In Syracuse I was born, and wed
Unto a woman happy but for me. Shakespeare.
Then I shall be no more;
And Adam, wedd'd to another Eve,
Shall live with her. Milton.

The woman in us still prosecutes a decent like that begun in the garden; and our understandings are wedd'd to an Eve; as fatal as the mother of their miseries. Glanville.

3. To unite for ever.
Affliction is enamour'd of thy parts,
And thou art wedd'd to calamity. Shakespeare.

4. To take for ever.
Though the principal men of the house of commons were again elected to serve in this parliament, yet they were far from wedd'ing the war, or taking themselves to be concerned to make good any declaration made by the former. Clarendon.
They positively and concern'dly wedd'd his cause.

5. To unite by love or fondness.
Men are wedd'd to their lusts, and resolv'd upon a wicked course; and so it becomes their interest to wish there were no God. Tillotson.

W E D

To WED. v. n. To contract matrimony.
When I shall wed,
That lord whose hand shall take my plight, shall carry
Halt my love with him, half my care and duty. Shakespeare.

To love, to wed,
For Hymen's rites, and for the marriage bed,
You were ordain'd. Suckling.
Nor took I Grief, by blind fancy led,
Or hasty choice as many women wed;
But with deliberate care. Dryden.

WEDDING. n. f. [from wed.] Marriage;
nuptials; the nuptial ceremony.
Come, away!

For you shall hence upon your wedding day.
I will dance and eat plums at your wedding. Shakespeare.
Let her beauty be her wedding dowry;
For me and my possessions she esteems not. Shakespeare.

When my son was entered into his weddingclamber, he fell down and died. 2 Ffion.
These three country bills agree, that each wedding produces four children. Graunt.
His friends were invited to come and make merry with him, and this was to be the wedding-feast. L'Arrange.

It affirmed herself a virgin, the must on her wedding-day, and in her wedding cloths perform the ceremony of going alone into the den, and stay an hour with the lion. Swift.
A woman seldom asks advice before she has bought her wedding-cloths. Spectator.

WEDGE. n. f. [ugge, Danish; wegge,
Dutch.]

1. A body which, having a sharp edge continually growing thicker, is used to cleave timber; one of the mechanical powers.

A barbarous troop of clownish fane
The honour of these noble boughs down threw;
Under the wedge I heard the trunk to groan. Spenser.

The fifth mechanical faculty is the wedge used in the cleaving of wood.
He left his wedge within the cloven oak. Dryden.

The oak let many a heavy groan, when he was cleft with a wedge of his own timber. Airbuthnot.

2. A mass of metal.
As sparkles from the anvil us'd to fly,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are swaid. Spenser.

When I saw a goodly Babylonish garment, and a wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight, then I coveted them. Joshua.

3. Any thing in the form of a wedge.
In warlike matters they appear,
In rhombs, and wedges, and half-moons, and wings. Milton.

To WEDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cleave with a wedge.
My heart,
As wedged with a sigh, would live in twain,
Lest Hector, or my father, should perceive me. Shakespeare.

2. To drive as a wedge is driven.
Where have you been broiling?—
—Among the crowd? 'th' abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more. Shakespeare.

3. To force as a wedge forces.
Part
In common rang'd in figure wedge their way, Intelligent of seasons. Milton.

4. To fasten by wedges.
Wedge on the keenest scythes,
And give us steeds that stout against the foe. A. Philips.

5. To fix as a wedge.
Your wit will not so soon out as another man's will; it is strongly wedged up in a blockhead. Shakespeare.

W E E

Sergefthus in the centaur, soon he Wedg'd in the rocky shoals and cliffs.

What impulse can be propagated from one ele, entombed and lodged in the very center of the earth, to another in the center of Saturn? Bentley.
WEDLOCK. n. f. [peb and lac, Saxon, marriage and gift.] Marriage; matrimony.

She doth stray about
By holy crosses, where the kneels and prays
For happy wedlock hours. Shakespeare.
Sirrah, your brother is legitimate;
Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him,
And if she did play false, the fault was hers. Shakespeare.

Can wedlock know to great a curse,
As putting husbands out to nurse? Clarendon.
He his happiest choice too late Shall meet already link'd, and wedlock-bound
To a fell adversary. Milton.

May not a prison or a grave,
I die wedlock, banon's title have? Darham.
One thought the sex's prime felicity
Was from the bonds of a wedlock to be free,
And uncontroll'd to give account to none. Dryden.
A man determin'd, about the fiftieth year of his age, to enter upon wedlock. Addison.

WEDNESDAY. n. f. [pobernstag, Saxon;
odenstag, Swedish; woensdag, Dutch;
woensdag, Islandick.] The fourth day of the week, so named by the Gothick nations from Woden or Odin.

Where is the honour of him that died on Wednesday? Shakespeare.
The offices of prayer he had in his church, not only upon the Sundays, and festivals, and their eves, as also Wednesdays and Fridays. Fell.

WEE. adj. [a Saxon word of the same root with weem, Dutch; wenig, German.] Little; small; whence the word weeple or weefel is used for little; as, a weefel face. In Scotland it denotes small or little; as wee ane, a little one, or child,
a wee bit, a little bit.

Does he not wear a great round heud, like a glover's paring knife?—No, farfooth, he hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard. Shakespeare.

WE'CHELM. n. f. [This is often written witch elm.] A species of elm.

A cion of a weechelm grafted upon an ordinary elm, will put forth leaves as broad as the him of a hat. Bacon.

WEED. n. f. [peob, Saxon, tares.]

1. An herb noxious or useless.
If he had an immoderate ambition, which is a weed, if it be a weed, apt to grow in the best soils, it doth not appear that it was in his nature. Clarendon.

He wand'ring feeds
On slowly growing herbs and ranker weeds. Sandys.

Too much manuring fill'd that field with weeds,
While sects, like locusts, did destroy the seed. Denham.

Stinking weeds and poisonous plants have their use. More.
When they are cut, let them lie, if weeds, to kill the weeds. Mortimer.

Their virtue, like their Tyber's flood Rolling, its course design'd the country's good;
But oft the torrent's too impetuous speed
From the low earth tore some polluting weed;
And with the blood of Jove there always ran
Some viler part, some tincture of the mud. Prior.
If they are often seen to lose that little religion they were taught in their youth, 'tis no more to be wondered at, than to see a little flower choked and killed amongst rank weeds. Lau.

2. [peba, Saxon; waed, Dutch.] A garment; clothes; habit; dress. Now scarce in use, except in widow's weeds,
the mourning dress of a widow.

My mind for weeds your virtue's fiery wears.

Neither is it any man's business to cloath all his servants with one weed, nor theirs to cloath themselves so, if left to their own judgments. Hooker.

They meet upon the way

An aged fire, in long black weeds yclad;

His feet all bare, his beard all hoary gray.

And by his belt his hook he hanging had. Spenser.

Livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears, so called as it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure. Spenser.

The luteke throws her enamell'd skin.

Feed wide enough to wrap a fairy in. Shakespeare.

Throgs of knights, and barons bold,

In weeds of peace high triumphs hold,

With force of ladies. Milton.

Lately you fan hand in woman's weed

Weep'd my glad heart. Waller.

3 It is used by Chapman for the upper garment.

The morning, in her throne of gold,

Survayd the vast world, by whose green light

The nymph ador'd me with attires as bright;

Her own hands putting on both shirt and weed. Chapman.

TO WEED, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rid of noxious plants.

When you tow the berries of bays, weed not the borders for the first half year; for the weed growth then shade. Bacon.

Your seedlings having stood till June, bestow a weeding or a slight hawing upon them. Mortimer.

2. To take away as noxious plants.

Oh Marcius,

Each word thou'lt spoke hath weeded from my heart

A root of ancient envy. Shakespeare.

Sarcasms, contumelies, and invectives, till to many pages of our controversial writings, that were those weeded out, many volumes would be reduced to a more moderate bulk and temper. Dec. of Priests.

3. To free from any thing hurtful or offensive.

He weeded the kingdom of such as were devoted to Flaminia, and munimized it from that most dangerous confederacy. Houbl.

4. To root out vice.

Wise fathers be not as well aware in weeding from their children all things, as they were before in grafting in them learning. Afham.

One by one, as they appeared, they might all be weeded out, without any signs that ever they had been there. Locke.

WEEDER, n. f. [from weed.] One that takes away any thing noxious.

A weeder out of his proud adversaries,

A liberal rewarder of his friends. Shakespeare.

WEEDHOOK, n. f. [weed and hook.] A hook by which weeds are cut away or extirpated.

In May get a weedhook, a scotch, and a glove,

And weed out such weeds as the corn doth not love. Taylor.

WEEDLESS, adj. [from weed.] Free from weeds; free from any thing useless or noxious.

So many weedless paradises be,

Which of themselves produce no venomous sin. Doane.

A crystal brook,

When troubled most it does the bottom flow;

WEEDY, adj. [from weed.]

1. Consisting of weeds.

There on the pendant boughs her coronet weed

Clumb'ring to hang, an envious river broke,

When down her weedy trophies and herself

I fell in the weeping brook. Shakespeare.

2. Abounding with weeds.

Had in a weedy lake all night I lay,

Secure of safety. Dryden.

If it is weedy, let it lie upon the ground. Mortimer.

WEEK, n. f. [peoc, Sax. weke, Dutch; veck, Swedish.] The space of seven days.

Fulfil her week, and we will give thee this also. Genesis.

The division of time by weeks hath been universally observed in the world, not only amongst the civilized, but likewise among the most barbarous nations. Hildes.

WEEKDAY, n. f. [week and day.] Any day not Sunday.

One said dith his weed day meal affords,

An added pudding salu'd the Lord's. Pop.

WEEKLY, adj. [from week.] Happening, produced or done once a week; hebdomadary.

The Jews had always their weekly readings of the law of Moses. Hooker.

So he'd out fires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,

And multiply'd with leens their weekly bill. Dryden.

Nothing more frequent in their weekly papers, than affecting to confound the terms of clergy and high-clutch, and then loading the latter with calumny. Suiff.

WEEKLY, adv. [from week.] Once a week; by hebdomadal periods.

There are obliged to perform divine worship in their times weekly, and are sometimes called hebdomadal canons. Ayliffe.

WELL, n. f. [wel, Saxon.]

1. A whirlpool.

2. [perhaps from willow.] A twiggen snare or trap for fish.

TO WERN, v. n. [penan, Saxon; waenen, Dutch.] To think; to imagine; to form a notion; to fancy. Obsolete.

Al lady dear, quoth then the gentle knight,

Well may I ween your guest is wondrous great. Spenser.

So well it her befeems, that ye would ween

Some angel she had been. Spenser.

When weening to return whence they did stray,

They cannot find that path which first was shown;

But wander to and fro in ways unknown,

Further from end than when they weared ween. Spenser.

Thy father, in pity of my hard distress,

I leved an army, weening to redeem

And ransom me in the diadem. Shakespeare.

When you of better luck,

I mean in perjur'd witness, than your master,

Whole number you are, while here he liv'd

Upon this naughty earth. Shakespeare.

They ween'd

That self-same day, by fight or by surprise,

To win the mount of God; and on his throne

To set the envy of his state, the proud

Aspirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain. Milton.

TO WEEP, v. n. pret. and part. pass. wept,

wepted. [peopan, Saxon.]

1. To show sorrow by tears.

In that sad time

My manly eyes did scorn an humble tear;

And what these sorrows could not hence exhale,

That beauty hath, and made them blind with weeping. Shakespeare.

I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmanly sadness in his youth. Shakespeare.

The days of weeping and mourning for Mules were ended. Deuteronomy.

Have you wept for your sin, so that you were indeed sorrowful in your spirit? Are you so sorrowful that you hate it? Do you so hate it that you have left it?

Away! with women weep, and leave me here,

Fix'd like a man, to die without a tear,

Or live or slay us both. Dryden.

A corps it was, but whole it was, unknown;

Yet mov'd, however, she made the case her own,

Took the bad omen of a shipwreck'd man,

As for a stranger wept. Dryden.

When Darius wept over his army, that within a single age not a man of all that confluence would be left alive, Artabanus improved his meditation by adding, that yet all of them should meet with too many evils, that every one should with himself dead long before. Wake.

2. To shed tears from any passion.

Then they for sudden joy did weep,

And I for sorrow sung,

That such a king should play bo-peep,

And go the fools among. Shakespeare.

3. To lament; to complain.

They weep unto me, saying, Give us flesh that we may eat. Numbers.

TO WEEP, v. a.

1. To lament with tears; to bewail; to bemoan.

If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my eyes.

Nor was I near to close his dying eyes,

To wash his wounds, to accept his obseques. Dryden.

We weand'ring go

Through dreary wailes, and weep each other's woe. Pop.

2. To shed moisture.

Thus was this place

A happy seat of various view,

Graves whose rich trees wept od'rous gums and balsm. Milton.

3. To drop.

Let India boast her plants; nor envy we

The weeping amber of the balmy tree,

While fly our oaks the precious loads are borne,

And realms commanded which those trees adorn. Pop.

4. To abound with wet.

Rye-grass grows on clayey and weeping grounds. Mortimer.

WEPPER, n. f. [from weep.]

1. One who sheds tears; a lamenter; a bawler; a mourner.

If you have loved God in a holy life, send away the women and the weepers, tell them it is a sign of intemperance to weep too much as to laugh too much, if thou art alone, or with fitting company, die as thou shouldst, but do not die impatiently, and like a fox caught in a trap. Taylor.

Laughter is easy, but the wonder lies,

What store of time supply'd the weeper's eyes. Dryden.

2. A white border on the sleeve of a mourning coat.

WEIRISH, adj. [See WEARISH.] This old word is used by Afham in a sense which the lexicographers seem not to have known. Applied to tuffe, it means insipid; applied to the body, weak and wulhy; here it seems to mean, sour, fairly.

A voice not soft, weak, piping, womanish; but audible, strong, and manlike: a counter-sense not weirish and crabbed, but fair and comely. Afham.

TO WEIR, v. n. preterit weir or wote.

[piran, Sax. weiran, Dut.] To know;

to be informed; to have knowledge. Obsolete.

Him the prince with gentle court did board,

Sir knight, might I of you this courtly read,

To weir why on your shield, to quality lord,

Bear ye the picture of that lady's head? Spenser.

I had,

On pain of punishment, the world to weir

We found up predest, Shakespeare.

But we'll weir thy cruel wrong

Adorns a nobler poet's tongue. Prior.

WEIRLESS, adj. [from weir.] Unknown;

ing. Spenser.

WEIRH, n. f. [pepel, Sax. weir, Dut. weirho, Lat.] A grub.

A worm called a weirh, bred under ground, feedeth upon roots, as parsnips and carrots. Bacon.

Corn is so innocent from breeding of mice, that it doth not produce the very vermin that live in it and consume it. Bentley.

WEASEL. n. f. [See WEASEL.]

I suck melancholy out of a song, as a weasel sucks eggs. Shakespeare.

The corn-devouring weasel here abides, And the wife ant. Dryden.

WEFT. The old preterit and part. pass. from TO WAVE. Spenser.

WEFT. n. f. [guave, Fr. vafa, to wander, Islandick; vagus, Latin.]

1. That of which the claim is generally waved; any thing wandering without an owner, and seized by the lord of the manor.

His horse, it is the herald's weft; No, 'tis a mare. Ben Jonson.

2. It is in Bacon for wast, a gentle blast. The smell of violets exceedeth in sweetness that of spices, and the strongest sort of smells are best in a weft ular off. Bacon.

WEFT. n. f. [pefta, Sax.] The woof of cloth.

WEFTAGE. n. f. [from weft.] Texture.

The whole muscles, as they lie upon the bones, might be truly tanned; whereby the weftage of the fibres might more easily be observed. Cru.

TO WEIGH. v. a. [wagen, Sax. weyhen, Dutch.]

1. To examine by the balance.

Earth taken from land adjoining to the Nile, and preserved so as not to be wet nor wasted, and weighed daily, will not alter weight until the seventeenth of June, when the river beginneth to rise; and then it will grow more and more ponderous, till the river cometh to its height. Bacon.

Th' Eternal hung forth his golden scales, Wherein all things created first he weigh'd. Milton.
She does not weigh her meat in a pair of scales, but she weighs it in a much better balance; so much as gives a proper strength to her body, and renders it able and willing to obey the soul. Law.

2. To be equivalent to in weight.

They that must weigh out my afflictions, They that my trust must grow to, live not here; They are, as all my comforts are, far hence. Shakespeare.

By the exsuction of the air out of a glass vessel, it made that vessel take up, or suck up, to speak in the common language, a body weighing divers ounces. Boyle.

3. To pay, allot, or take by weight.

They weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver. Zechariah.

4. To raise; to take up the anchor.

Here he left me, ling'ring here delay'd His parting kiss, and there his anchor weigh'd. Dryden.

5. To examine; to balance in the mind; to consider.

Regard not who it is which speaketh, but weigh only what is spoken. Hooker.
I have in equal balance justly weigh'd What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer.

And find our griefs heavier than our offences. Shak.
The ripeness or unripeness of the occasion must ever be well weigh'd. Bacon.

His majesty's speedy march left that design to be better weigh'd and digested. Clarendon.

You chose a retreat, and not till you had maturely weigh'd the advantages of rising higher with the banners of the fall. Dryden.

All grant him prudent; prudence interest weighs, And interest bids him seek your love and praise. Dryden.

The mind, having the power to suspend the satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to examine them on all sides, and weigh them with others. Locke.

He is the only proper judge of our perfections, who weighs the goodness of our actions by the sincerity of our intentions. Spectator.

6. To compare by the scales.

Here in nice balance truth with gold she weighs, And solid quidding against empty praise. Pope.

7. To regard; to consider as worthy of notice.

I weigh not you— You do not weigh me; that is, you care not for me. Shakespeare.

8. To weigh down. To overbalance.

Four weighs down a faith with shame. Daniel.

9. To weigh down. To overburden; to oppress with weight; to depress.

In thy blood will reign A melancholy damp of cold and dry, To weigh thy spirits down. Milton.
Her father's crimes Sit heavy on her, and weigh down her prayers; A crown usurp'd, a lawful king depos'd, His children murder'd. Dryden.

My soul is quite weigh'd down with care, and asks The lost refreshment of a moment's sleep. Addison.
Excellent persons, weigh'd down by this habitual sorrow of heart, rather deserve our compassion than reproach. Addison.

TO WEIGH. v. n.

1. To have weight.

Exactly weighing, and strangling a chicken in the scales, upon an immediate ponderation, we could discover no difference in weight; but suffering it to lie eight or ten hours, until it grew perfectly cold, it weighed most sensibly lighter. Brown.

2. To be considered as important; to have weight in the intellectual balance.

This objection ought to weigh with those, whose reading is designed for much talk and little knowledge. Locke.

A wife man is then best satisfied, when he finds that the same argument which weighs with him has weighed with thousands before him, and is such as hath born down all opposition. Addison.

3. To raise the anchor.

When gathering clouds o'ershadow all the skies, And shoot quick lightning, weigh, my boys, he cries. Dryden.

4. To bear heavily; to press hard.

Canst thou not muller to a mind dispos'd, And with some sweet oblivious antidote Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff Which weighs upon the heart? Shakespeare.

5. To sink by its own weight.

The Indian fig boweth so low, as it taketh root again; the plenty of the sap, and the softness of the stalk, making the bough, being overladen, weigh down. Bacon.

WEIGHED. adj. [from weigh.] Experienced.

In an embassy of weight, choice was made of some sad person of known experience, and not of a young man, not weigh'd in state matters. Bacon.

WEIGHED. n. f. [from weigh.] He who weighs.

WEIGHT. n. f. [piht, Saxon.]

1. Quantity measured by the balance.

Tobacco cut and weighed, and then dried by the fire, loseth weight; and, after being laid in the open air, recovereth weight again. Bacon.

Fain would I chuse a middle course to steer; Nature's too kind, and justice too severe: Speak for us both, and to the balance bring, On either side, the father and the king: Heav'n knows my heart is bent to favour thee; Make it but scanty weight, and leave the rest to me. Dryden.

So was every thing of the temple, even to the weight of a flesh-hook, given to David, as you may see. Leffry.

Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it eat more than its own weight; and yet there was no acid found in its body. Arbutnot.

2. A mass by which, as the standard, other bodies are examined.

Just balances, just weights, shall ye have. Leviticus.

Undoubtedly there were such weights which the physicians used, who, though they might reckon according to the weight of the money, they did not weigh their drugs with pieces of money. Arbutnot.

When the balance is entirely broke, by mighty weights fallen into either scale, the power will never continue long in equal division, but run entirely into one. Swift.

3. Ponderous mass.

A man leaseth better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if proportionable, strengtheneth the sinews by contracting them, otherwise, where no contraction is needful, weight hindereth; as we see, in horse-races, men are curious to forester that there be not the least weight upon the one horse more than upon the other. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards, and then forwards, with so much the greater force. Brown.

Wolsey, who from his own great store might have A palace or a college for his grave, Lies here interr'd:—

Nothing but earth to earth, no pond'rous weight Upon him, but a pebble or a quoit:

Is thus thou best neglected, what must we Hope after death, who are but shreds of thee? Bishop Corbet.

All their confidence

Under the weight of mountains buried deep. Milton.
Pride, like a gulf, allows us up; our very virtues, when to leavened, becoming weights and plummet to sink us to the deeper ruin. Gow of the Tong.

Then thou the ill; and know, my dear, Kindness and constancy will prove The only pillars fit to bear

So vast a weight as that of love. Prior.

4. Gravity; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

Heaviness or weight is not here considered as being such a natural quality, whereby condensed bodies do of themselves tend downwards; but rather as being an affection, whereby they may be measured. Huygens.

The shaft, that slightly was impress'd, Now from his heavy fall with weight increas'd, Drove through his neck. Dryden.

What natural agent impel them so strongly with a transverse side blow against that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are falling? Bentley.

5. Pressure; burden; overwhelming power.

Thou art no Atlas for to great a weight. Shaksp.
As some of the angels did scarce sooner receive than break the law of obedience; so some men, by an unhappy imitation of such angels, are more ready to slander the weight of their yoke than to bear it. Holyday.

So shall the world go on, To good malignant, to bad men benign, Under her own weight groaning. Milton.

We must those, who grow beneath the weight Of age, disease, or want, commiserate. Denham.

The prince may carry the plough, but the weight lies upon the people. L'Estrange.

Possession's load was grown so great, He sunk beneath the cumbrous weight. Swift.

They are like so many weights upon our minds, that make us less able and less inclined to raise up our thoughts and affections to the things that are above. Law.

6. Importance; power; influence; efficacy; consequence; moment.

How to make ye suddenly an answer, In such a point of weight, so near mine honour, In truth I know not. Shakespeare.

It is the right of heir carry any weight with it, if it be the ordinance of God, must not all be subject to it? Locke.

To make the sense of esteem or disgrace sink the deeper, and be of the more weight, other agreeable or disagreeable things should constantly accompany these different states. Locke.

An author's arguments lose their weight, when we are persuaded that he only writes for argument's sake. Addison.

See Light, the sorrows of my heart,
 Ere yet it be too late;
 And bear my Saviour's dying groans,
 To give those sorrows weight.
 The solemnities that encompass the magnificent add dignity to all his actions, and weight to all his words. Atterbury

WEIGHTILY, adv. [from weighty.]

1. Heavily; ponderously.

2. Solidly; importantly.

Is his poetry the worse, because he makes his agents speak weightily and sententiously? Broome
WEIGHTINESS, n. f. [from weighty.]

1. Ponderosity; gravity; heaviness.

2. Solidity; force.

I fear I have dwelt longer on this passage than the weightiness of any argument in it requires. Locke
 3. Importance.

The apparent defect of her judgment, joined to the weightiness of the adventure, caused many to marvel. Hopwood

WEIGHTLESS, adj. [from weight.] Light; having no gravity.

How by him balanc'd in the weightless air?
 Canst thou the wisdom of his works declare?
Sandys

It must both weightless and immortal prove,
 Because the centre of it is above. Dryden

WEIGHTY, adj. [from weight.]

1. Heavy; ponderous.

You have already weary'd fortune so,
 She cannot further be your friend or foe,
 But fits all breathless, and admires to feel
 A fate to weighty that it stops her wheel. Dryden

2. Important; momentous; efficacious.

I to your assistance do make love,
 Making the business for the common eye
 For tundry weighty reasons. Shakespeare

It only forbids suits in lighter loss and indignities, such as our Lord there mentions, and making the law the instrument of revenge in weightier matters. Ketticell

No fool Pythagoras was thought:
 Whilst he his weighty doctrines taught,
 He made his listening scholars stand,
 Their mouth still cover'd with their hand:
 Else, may be, some odd thinking youth,
 Let friend to doctrine than to truth,
 Might have refused to let his ears
 Attend the music of the spheres. Prior

Thus spoke to my lady the knight full of care,
 Let me have your advice in a weighty affair. Swift

3. Rigorous; severe. Not in use.

If, after two days thine, Athens contains thee,
 Attend our weighty judgment. Shakespeare

WELAWAY, interj. [This I once believed a corruption of wel away, that is, happiness is gone: so Junius explained it; but the Saxon exclamation is palapa, wo on wo. From welaway is formed by corruption wellday.] Alas.

Harrow now out, and welaway, he cried,
 What dismal day hath sent this cursed light! Spenser

Ah, welaway, most noble lords, how can
 Your cruel eyes endure to precious sight? Spenser

Welaway, the while I was so fond,
 To leave the good that I had in hand. Spenser

WELCOME, adj. [bien venu, French;
placume, Saxon; welkom, Dutch.]

1. Received with gladness, admitted willingly to any place or enjoyment; grateful; pleasing.

I serve you, madam:
 Your graces are right welcome. Shakespeare

He, though not of the plot, will like it,
 And with it should proceed; for, into men
 Prefert with their wants, all change is ever welcome.
Ben Jonson

Here let me earn my bread,
 Till oft invoked death
 Halten the welcome end of all my pains. Milton
 He that knows how to make those he converses with easy, has found the true art of living, and being welcome, and valued every where. Locke

2. To bid WELCOME. To receive with professions of kindness.

Some stood in a row in to civil a fashion, as if to welcome us; and divers put their arms a little abroad, which is their gesture when they bid any welcome. Bacon

WELCOME, interj. A form of salutation used to a new comer, elliptically used for you are welcome.

Welcome, he said,
 O long expected, to my dear embrace! Dryden
Welcome, great monarch, to your own. Dryden
WELCOME, n. f.

1. Salutation of a new comer.

Welcome ever smiles, and farewell goes out sighing.
Shakespeare
Welcome opening his free arms, and weeping
 His welcome forth. Shakespeare

2. Kind reception of a new comer.

I should be free from injuries, and abound as much in the true causes of welcomes, as I should find want of the effects thereof. Sidney
 I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
 For your fit welcome. Shakespeare
 Madam, new years may well expect to find
Welcome from you, to whom they are so kind:
 Still as they pass they court and smile on you,
 And make your beauty, as themselves, seem new.
Waller

Where diligence opens the door of the understanding, and impartiality keeps it, truth finds an entrance and a welcome too. South

To WELCOME, v. a. To salute a new comer with kindness.

I know no can'te
 Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
 Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
 As my sweet Richard. Shakespeare
 They stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome us. Bacon

Thus we salute thee with our early song,
 And welcome thee, and with thee long. Milton

To welcome home
 His warlike brother, is Prithous come. Dryden
 The lark and linnet from their warbling throats,
 To welcome in the spring. Dryden

WELCOME to our house, n. f. [lactuca marina, Latin.] An herb. Ainsworth

WELCOMENESS, n. f. [from welcome.] Gratefulness.

Our joys, after longer centuries of years, may seem to have grown older, by having been enjoyed to many ages; yet will they really still continue new, not only upon the scores of their welcomeness, but by their perpetually equal, because minute, distance from a period. Bage

WELCOMER, n. f. [from welcome.] The saluter or receiver of a new comer.

Farewell, thou woful welcomer of glory!
Shakespeare

WELD, or WOULD, n. f. [luteola, Latin.]

Yellow weed, or diers weed.

To WELD, for To weld. Spenser

To WELD, v. a. To beat one mass into another, so as to incorporate them.

Sparkling or welting heat is used when you double up your iron to make it thick enough, and to weld on work in the doubling into one another. Mason

WELDER, n. f. [a term perhaps merely Irish; though it may be derived from
To weld, to turn or manage: whence welder, welder.] Manager; actual occupier.

Such immediate tenants have others under them and for a third and fourth in subordination, till a comes to the welder, as they call him, who sits at a rack-rent, and lives miserably. Swift

WELFARE, n. f. [well and fare.] Happiness; success; prosperity.

If friends to a government forbear their assistance they put it in the power of a few desperate men to ruin the welfare of those who are superior to them in strength and interest. Addison

Discretion is the perfection of reason: cunning is a kind of instinct that only looks out after our immediate interest and welfare. Spencer

To WELK, v. a. [Of this word in Spenser
 I know not well the meaning: pelcan, in Saxon, is to roll; wolken, in German,
 and pelcen, in Saxon, are clouds; whence
 I suppose welk, or whilk, is an undulation or corrugation, or corrugated or convolved body. Whilk is used for a small shellfish.] To cloud; to obscure. It seems in Spenser both active and neuter.

Now sad winter welked bath the day,
 And Phœbus, weary of his yearly task,
 Establish'd bath his steeds in lowly lay,
 And taken up his inn in fibres hark. Spenser
 As gentle shepherd in sweet eventide;
 When ruddy Phœbus' guns to welken west,
 Marks which do bite their hasty supper best. Spenser

The welked Phœbus 'gan avale
 His weary wain. Spenser

WELKED, adj. Set with protuberances.
 Properly, I believe, welkel, from whelk.

Methought his eyes
 Were two full moons, he had a thousand noses, Horns welk'd and wav'd like the curridged sea. Shakespeare

WELKIN, n. f. [from pelcan, to roll, or pelcen, clouds, Saxon.]

1. The visible regions of the air. Out of use, except in poetry.

Ne in all the welkin was no cloud. Chaucer
 He leaves the welkin way most beaten plain,
 And rapt with whirling wheels inflames the skyen
 With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to shine. Spenser

The swallow peeps out of her nest,
 And cloudy welkin cleareth. Spenser
 Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood;
 Amaze the welkin with your broken shaves. Shakespeare

With seats of arms
 From either end of heav'n the welkin burns; Milton

Now my task is smoothly done,
 I can fly or I can run
 Quickly to the green earth's end,
 Where the bow'd welkin flow doth bend. Milton

Their hideous yells
 Rend the dark welkin. Philips

2. WELKIN Eye, is, I suppose, blue eye;
 skycoloured eye.

Yet were it true
 To say this boy were like me! Come, for page,
 Look on me with your welkin eye, sweet villain. Shakespeare

WELL, n. f. [pelle, pell, Saxon.]

1. A spring; a fountain; a source.

Be gin then, fountains of the sacred well,
 That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring. Milton

As the root and branch are but one tree,
 And well and stream do but one river make;
 So the root and well corrupted be,
 The stream and branch the same corruption take. Deetes

2. A deep narrow pit of water.

Now up, now down, like buckets in a well.
Dryden

The muscles are so many well-buckets; when one of them acts and draws, 'tis necessary that the other must obey. Dryden

3. The cavity in which stairs are placed. §

Hollow newelled stairs are made about a square hollow newel; suppose the well-hole to be eleven foot long, and six foot wide, and we would bring up a pair of stairs from the first floor eleven foot high, it being intended a sky-light shall fall through the hollow newel. Mason

To WELL, v. n. [peallan, Saxon.] To spring; to issue as from a spring.

Then by a crystal stream did gently play,
Which from a sacred fountain welled forth always.
Spenser

A dreary corse,
All wallow'd in his own yet lake warm blood,
That from his wound yet welled forth, alas!
Spenser
Think it shifts to hit him from the ground,
With elated locks, and blood that welld from out the wound.
Dryden
From his two springs
Pore welling out, he through the lucid lake
Of four Danube rolls his infant stream.
Thomson

To WILL. A. A. To pour any thing forth.

To her people wealth they forth do well,
And health to every foreign nation.
Spenser
WELL. adj. [Well seems to be sometimes an adjective, though it is not always easy to determine its relations.]

1. Not sick; being in health.
Lady, I am not well, else I should answer
From a full flowing stomach.
Shakespeare
In poison there is physick; and this news,
That would, had I been well, have made me sick,
Being sick, hath in some measure made me well.
Shakespeare

While thou art well, thou mayest do much good;
but when thou art sick, thou canst not tell what thou shalt be able to do: it is not very much nor very good. Few men mend with sickness, as there are but few who by travel and a wandering life become devout.
Taylor
Men under irregular appetites never think themselves well, so long as they fancy they might be better, then from better they must rise to best.
Jeffrange

'Tis easy for my, when well, to give advice to them that are not.
Wake
2. Happy.
Mark, we use
To say the dead me well.
Shakespeare
Holdings were so plentiful, and holders so scarce, as well was the landlord, who could get one to be his tenant.
Carrus
Charity is made the constant companion and perfection of all virtues; and well it is for that virtue where it most enters and longest stays.
Spratt

3. Convenient; advantageous.
This exactness is necessary, and it would be well too if it extended itself to common conversation.
Locke
It would have been well for Genoa, if she had followed the example of Venice, in not permitting her nobles to make any purchase of lands in the dominions of a foreign prince.
Addison

4. Being in favour.
He followed the fortunes of that family; and was well with Henry the Fourth.
Dryden
5. Recovered from any sickness or misfortune.
I am sorry
For your displeasure; but all will sure be well.
Shakespeare

Just thoughts and modest expectations are easily satisfied. If we don't over-rate our pretensions, all will be well.
Collier
WELL. adv. [well, Gothic; pell, Saxon;
well, Dutch; vel, Islandick.]

1. Not ill; not unhappily.
Some gentle, and more chaste, kind heav'n
To this well-totter peer has given:
What then? he must have rule and sway;
Else all is wrong till he is in play.
Prior

2. Not ill; not wickedly.
My bargains, and well-won thrift, he calls interred.
Shakespeare
Thou one bad act with many deeds well done
Mayst cover.
Milton

3. Skillfully; properly; in a laudable manner.
Beware, and govern well thy appetite.
Milton
Whether the learn'd Minerva be her theme,
Or chaste Diana bathing in the stream,
None can record their heavenly praise to well.
Dry
What poet would not mourn to see
His brother write as well as he?
Swift

4. Not amiss; not unsuccessfully; not erroneously.
Soliman commended them for a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason.
Knollys
The fall of that philosopher well-blund,
Who long and loudly in the schools declaim'd.
Danham
'Tis almost impossible to translate verbally and well.
Dryden

5. Not insufficiently; not defectively.
The plain of Jordan was well watered every where.
Geopys
We are well able to overcome it.
Numbers
The merchant adventurers, being a strong company, and well underfitted with rich men, held out bravely.
Bacon

6. To a degree that gives pleasure.
I like well, in some places, fair columns upon frames of carpenter's work.
Bacon
7. With praise; favourably.
All the world speaks well of you.
Pope

8. Well is sometimes, like the French bien, a term of concession.
The knot might well be cut, but tied it could not be.
Sidney

9. Conveniently; suitably.
Know
In measure what the mind can well contain.
Milton

10. To a sufficient degree: a kind of slight sense.
A private caution I know not well how to fort, unless I should call it political, by no means to build too near a great neighbour.
Hutton

11. It is a word by which something is admitted as the ground for a conclusion.
Well, let's away, and say how much is done.
Shakespeare
Well, by this author's confession, a number superior are for the succession in the house of Hanover.
Swift

12. As well as. Together with; not less than.
Long and tedious, as well as grievous and uneasy courses of physick, how necessary forever to the cure, much entangle the patient, and reduce him to a low and languishing state.
Blackmore
Ceptos was the magazine of all the trade from Aethiopia, by the Nile, as well as of those commodities that came from the west by Alexandria.
Arbuthnot

13. Well enough. In a moderate degree;
tolerably.
14. Well is him or me; bene est, he is happy.
Well is him that dwelleth with a wife of understanding, and that hath not slipped with his tongue.
Feelingness

15. Well nigh. Nearly; almost.
I fixed well nigh half th' angelick name.
Milton

16. It is used much in composition, to express any thing right, laudable, or not defective.
Antiochus understanding him not to be well affected to his affairs, provided for his own safety.
2 Mac
There may be safety to the well affected Persians; but to those which do contumpe against us, a memorial of destruction.
Esther
Should a whole host at once discharge the bow,
My well-ann'd shaft with death prevents the foe.
Pope
What well-appointed leader fronts us here?
Shakespeare
Well apparell'd April on the heel
Of limping winter treads.
Shakespeare
The pow'r of wisdom march'd before,
And, ere the sacrificing throng he join'd,
Admonish'd thus his well-attending mind.
Pope
Such music
Before was never made,
But when of old the sons of morning sung,
Whilst the Creator great

His constellations set,
And the well-balanc'd world on hinges set.

Learners must at first be believers, and then master's rules having been once made known to them, they mislead those who think it to be better to excuse them, if they go out of their way in a

W E L

A well-formed soul can be no more discerned in a well-formed than ill-shaped infant. Locke

A well-formed proposition is sufficient to communicate the knowledge of a subject. Watts

Oh! that I'd died before the well-fought wall! Had some distinguished day renown'd my fall, All Greece had paid my solemn funeral. Pope

Good men have a well-grounded hope in another life; and are as certain of a future recompence, as of the being of God. Atterbury

Let firm, well-hammer'd soles protect thy feet Through freezing snows. Gay

The camp of the heathen was strong, and well-hampered, and compass'd round with horsemens.

1. Mar.
Among the Romans, those who saved the life of a citizen, were dressed in an oaken garland; but among us, this has been a mark of such well-intentioned persons as would betray their country. Addison

He, full of fraudulent arts, This well-invented tale for truth imports. Dryden

He, by enquiry, got to the well-known house of Kalandar. Southey

Soon as thy letters trembling I unfold, That well-known name awakens all my woes. Pope

Where proud Athens rears her tow'ry head, With opening streets and flaming structures spread, She pass'd, delighted with the well-known fens. Pope

From a confus'd well-mann'd store You both employ and feed the poor. Waller

A noble soul is better plac'd with a zealous vindicator of liberty, than with a temporizing poet, or well-mannered court slave, and one who is ever decent, because he is naturally ferule. Dryden

Well-manners think no harm; but for the rest, Things faced they pervert, and hence is the lie. Dryden

By craft they may prevail on the workmen of some well-meaning men to engage in their designs. Rogers

He examines that well-meant, but unfortunate, lie of the conquest of France. Arbuthnot

A critic supposes he has done his part, if he proves a writer to have failed in an expression; and can't be wonder'd at, if the poet seem resolv'd not to own themselves in any error: for as long as one side disputes a well-meant endeavour, the other will not be satisfied with a moderate approbation. Pope

Many sober, well-minded men, who were real lovers of the peace of the kingdom, were imposed upon. Clarendon

Jarring interests of themselves create Th' according music of a well-mix'd state. Pope

When the blast of winter blows, Into the naked wood he goes, And seeks the tusk'd boar to rear, With well-mouth'd hounds and pointed spear. Dryden

The applause that other people's reason gives to virtuous and well-ordered actions, is the proper guide of children, till they grow able to judge for themselves. Locke

The fruits of unity, next unto the well-pleasing of God, which is all in all, are towards those that are without the church; the other towards those that are within. Bacon

The exercise of the offices of charity is always well-pleasing to God, and honourable among men. Atterbury

My voice shall found as you do prompt mine ear; And I will stoop and humble my intents To your well-practis'd wise directions. Shakespeare

The well-proportion'd shape, and beauteous face, Shall never more be seen by mortal eyes. Dryden

'Twas not the hasty product of a day, But the well-ripen'd fruit of wise delay. Dryden

Procure those that are fresh gathered, straight, smooth, and well-rooted. Mortimer

If I should instruct them, to make well-running verses, they want genius to give them strength. Dryden

The eating of a well-seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end. Locke

Instead of well-set hair, baldness. Isaiah

A sharp edg'd sword be girt about His well-spread shoulders. Chepman

Abraham and Sarah were old, and well-stricken in age. Genesis

Many well-shaped innocent virgins are waddling like big-bellied women. Spectator

We never see beautiful and well-tasted fruits from a tree choked with thorns and briars. Dryden

The well-tim'd oars With sounding strokes divide the sparkling waves. Smith

Wisdom's triumph is well-tim'd retreat, As hard a science to the fair as great. Pope

Mean time we thank you for your well-tim'd labour. Shakespeare

Go to your rest. Oh you are well-tim'd now, but I'll let down the pegs that make this music. Shakespeare

Her well-tim'd neck he view'd, And on her shoulders her diluvell'd hair. Dryden

A well-weigh'd judicious poem, which at first gains no more upon the world than to be just received, insinuates itself by insensible degrees into the liking of the reader. Dryden

He rails On me, my bargains, and my well-won thrift, Which he calls int'rest. Shakespeare

Each by turns the other's bound invade, As, in some well-wrought picture, light and shade. Pope

WELLADAY. interject. [This is a corruption of wellaway. See WELAWAY.]

Alas, O welladay, mistress Ford, having an honest man to your husband, to give him some such cause of suspicion! Shakespeare

Ah, welladay, I'm silent with baneful smart! Gay

WELLBEING. n. f. [well and be.] Happiness; prosperity.

Man must depend upon the uncertain dispositions of men for his wellbeing, but only on God and his own spirit. Taylor

For whose wellbeing So amply, and with hands so liberal, Thou hast provided all things. Milton

The most sacred ties of duty are founded upon gratitude, such as the duties of a child to his parent, and of a subject to his sovereign. From the former there is required love and honour, in recompence of being, and from the latter obedience and subjection, in recompence of protection and wellbeing. South

All things are subservient to the beauty, order, and wellbeing of the whole. I. E. change

He who does not co-operate with this holy spirit, receives none of those advantages which are the perfecting of his nature, and necessary to his wellbeing. Spectator

W E N

To WELTER. v. n. [pealtan, Saxon; welteren, Dutch; volutari, Latin.]

1. To roll in water or mire.

He must not float upon his wat'ry bier
Unweep'd, nor welter to the parching winds. —
Milton.

The companions of his fall o'erwhelm'd
He soon discerns, and weltring by his side
The next himself. — Milton.

The gasping head flies off; a purple flood Flows from the trunk, that welters in the blood. —
Dryden.

He sung Darius, great and good,
By too severe a fate,
Fallen from his high estate,
And weltring in his blood. — Dryden.

Bellous waders in blood; that mangled body,
Deform'd with wounds and weltring in its gore,
I know it well! Oh close the dreadful scene!
Believe me, Phœbus, I have seen too much. — Murphy.

2. To roll voluntarily; to wallow.
• If a man inglut himself with vanity, or welter in sluttishness like a swine, all learning, all goodness, is soon forgotten. — African.

WEMM. n. f. [pem, Saxon.] A spot; a scar.

Although the wound be healed, yet the wemme
or scar still remaineth. — Brevintout.

WEN. n. f. [pen, Saxon.] A fleshy or callous excrescence or protuberance.

Warts are said to be destroyed by the rubbing them with a green elder stick, and then burying the stick to rot in muck. It would be tried with orns and wens, and such other excrescences. —
Bacon.

Mountains seem but so many wens and unnatural protuberances upon the face of the earth. —
More.

The poet rejects all incidents which are foreign to his poem: they are wens and other excres-cences, which belong not to the body. —
Dryden.

Whither were ye, nymphs, when the amiablest died?
Clos'd o'er the head of your lov'd Lycidas? Milton

3. At the place in which.
Whither I thought the remnant of mine age
Should have been cherish'd by her child-like duty,
I know not full resolv'd to take a wife. Shaksp

4. Any WHITHER. At any place.
Hole nutritious waters were averted, as a dilution of the exterior earth could not be made any whither but it would fall into waters. Burnet

5. WHITHER, like here and there, has in composition a kind of pronominal signification; as, whercof, of which.

6. It has the nature of a noun. Not now
in use.
He shall find no whither fate to help himself. Spenser

But them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind, Thou hast left a better whither to find. Shaksp

ferred to something different.
Whence we read to many of them so much commended, some for their mild and merciful disposition, some for their virtuous severity, some for integrity of life. If these were the fruits of true and infallible principles delivered unto us in the word of God. Hooker

Whence all bodies seem to work by the communication of their nature, and impressions of their motions, the diffusion of species visible seemeth to participate more of the former, and the species un-visible of the latter. Race

Whence was the generally causes of poverty, the special nature of this war with Spain, it may by this, is like to be a lucrative war. Bacon and a right line to the object, we can hear in the dark, muffled, and by curve lines. Hobbes

Whence at first we had only three of these principles, their number is already twain to five. Baker

4. But on the contrary.
One imagines that the terrestrial matter, which is dissolved down with rain, enlarges the bulk of the earth, another fancies that the earth will ere long all be washed away by rains, and the waters of the ocean turned forth to overabound the dry land; whence, by this distribution of matter, continual provision is every where made for the supply of bodies. Woodward

WHITHER. adv. [where and at.]

1. At which.
This he thought would be the fittest resting place,

2. The name of a faction.

The south-west counties of Scotland have seldom a common, to drive them through the year, and the northern parts producing more than they need, there in the west come in the summer to buy at each the horse that come from the north; and to a word, whigging, it is driving the horses, all that drove were called the whiggoners, and thence the whigs. Now in that year, before the news came down of duke Hamilton's defeat, the mounties, animated their people to rise and march to Edinburgh; and they came up marching at the head of their parades with an number of fury, praying and preaching all the way as they came. The members of Aryle and his party came and headed them, they being about six thousand. This was called the whiggoners mood, and ever after that, all that opposed the court came in contempt to be called whigs, and from Scotland the word was brought into England, where it is now one of our unhappy terms of distinction.

Whoever have true value for church and state, should avoid the extremes of whig for the sake of the former, and the extremes of tory on the account of the latter.

WHIGGISM. adj. [from whig.] Relating to the whigs.

She 'll prove herself a tory plain,
From principles the whigs maintain;
And, to defend the whiggish cause,
Her topics from the Tories draws.

Pity was all the fault that was in me. Shakespeare
What we have, we prize not to the worth
While we enjoy it, but when; lack and loss,
Why then we rack the value. Shakespeare
Repeat it, while the sedentary earth Attends her end. Milton.

2. As long as.

Use your memory; you will sensibly experience a gradual improvement, while you take care not to overload it. Watts.

3. At the same time that.

Whiles by the experiment of this manifestation they glory God, for your professed subjection unto the gospel. 2 Corinthians.

Can he imagine that God lends forth an inexhaustible strength against some fins, while in others he permits men a power of repelling his grace?

All hearts still bend, and every voice
In loud applauding throngs rejoice,
While all his gracious aspects smile,
And crowds grow loyal as his gaze. Addison.

He has attentive to his own applause;
White wits and temples every sentence raise,
And wonder with a foolish face of praise. Pope
To WHILE. v. n. [from the noun.] To loiter.

Men guilty this way never have observed that the whiling time, the gathering together, and waiting a little before dinner, is the most awkwardly passed away of any. Speator.

WHILER. adv. [while and ere, or before.] A little while ago; ere while.
Not in use.

That cruel wight from whom I fear'd wh I live,
A man of hell, that calls himself Despair. Spenser.
Let us be jocund: will you troul the catch
You taught me, but while ere? Shakespeare

Those armies, that while ere Afrighted all the world, by him struck dead with fear. Drayton

Here lies Hobbinol, our shepherd whiler.
Raleigh.

He who, with all heaven's heraldry, whiler
Enter'd the world, now bleeds to give us ease. Milton.

WHILOM. adv. [hphilom, Saxon, that is, once on a time.] Formerly; once; of old. Not in use.

Where now the studious lawyers have their bowers.

There whilom went the Temp'or night-bird,
Till they decayed through pain. Spenser.

There where oftime a val'rous knight
And count'ss fiddler. Hudibras.

Yet art thou not inglorious in thy fate;
For so Apollo, with unweaving hand,
Whilom did slay his dearly loved mate. Milton.

WHIM. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from a thing turning round; nor can I find any etymology more probable.] A freak; an odd fancy; a caprice; an irregular motion of desire.

All the inperious whims relate,
That fill a female gambler's pate. Swift
He leant his whims and high-flown notions too,
Such as her men adopt, and fine men rue. Hort.
To WHIMPER. v. n. [zimmeren, German.]
To cry without any loud noise.

The father by his authority should always stop this sort of crying, and silence their whimpering.
Locke.

A laughing, toying, wheedling, whimpering the Saffron ke him as he on a god's in stage. Roe.

In peals of merriment, the roars, and now
She gently whimpers like a lowing cow. Saunders.
WHIMPER. adj. [I suppose from whimper.]

This word seems to mean distorted with crying.

This whimpered, whiming, purland, wayward boy.

This giant Juno's giant dwarf, Dan Cupid,
Ruler of love-chairs, lord of fold-dams,
Th' annotated sovereign of sighs and groans. Shakespeare

WHIMSEY. n. f. [only another form of the word whim.] A freak; a caprice; an odd fancy; a whim.

At this rate a pretended freak or whimsy may be justified. Life-long.

All the ridiculous and extravagant shapes that can be imagined, all the fancies and whimsies of poets and painters, and Egyptian idolaters, it to be they are consistent with life and propriety, and would be now actually in being if our athletes' notion were true. Ray

So now, as health or temper changes,
In larger compass Whims ranges;
This day I follow, the next above,
As light or bold whimsies move. Prior.

What I speak, my son Chloe, and what I write, Thou'st.

The difference there is between nature and art,
I count others in verse, but I love thee in prose.
And they love my whimsies, but thou hast my heart. Prior.

Oranges in whimsy boards went round.
He spoke with in a tedious and muddled mood, that I could not impute it to melancholy, or a spleenish whimsy. Blackmore

The extravagance of poetry
Is not a loss for figures to express
Men's folly, whimsies, and inconsistency. Swift.

WHIMSEY. adj. [from whimsy.] Freakish; capricious; oddly fanciful.

In another instance I am particular, or, as my neighbours call me, whimsical, as my good invites into it all the hard, I do not under any one to destroy their joys. Hobbs.

WHIM. n. f. [ch-en, Welsh; genia, Spanish, Latin.] Fun, grief.

With whims or with torments thy love's renew.
Tupper

Plants that have peckles in their leaf are holly, juniper, whim-bush, and thistle. Bacon

To WHINE. v. n. [pman, Saxon; we-nen, Dutch; exnan, Welsh.] To la- ment in low murmurs; to make a plain- tive noise; to moan meanly and ethimi- nately.

They came to the wood, where the hounds were in couples haying their coming, but with a whim, without craving liberty. Sidney

At his nurse's tears
He whim'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pangs blubb'd at him. Shakespeare.

Twice and once the hedge-pug whim'd. Shakespeare
Whim him.

Till, like a boy, you see him range his face,
And whine aloud for mercy. Shakespeare.

The common people have a whining tone and accent in their speech, as if they did still suffer some oppression. Davies.

Then at we whine, look pale,
And tell our tale,

Men are in pain

For us again;

So neither speaking doth become

The lover's state, nor being dumb.

He made a viler noise than swine

In windy weather, when they whine.

Some, under sheep's clothing, had the propen-ties of wolves; that is, they could whine and howl,

as well as bite and devour.

I was not born to hate to flatter crowds,

And move your pity by a whining tale.

Laughing at their whining may perhaps be the proper method.

Late was given for noble purposes; and therefore it must not be sacrificed to a quarrel, nor whined

away in love.

Upon a general mourning, merchants and woollendrapers would in four-and-twenty hours rate their cloths and silks to above a double price, and if the mourning continued long, come whining with petitions to the court, that they were ready to starve.

WHINE. n. f. [from the verb.] Plaintive

noise; mean or affected complaint.

The favourable opinion of men comes oftentimes by a few demure looks and affected whines, set off with some odd devotional pictures and gasmaces.

Thy hateful whine of woe

Breaks in upon my thoughts, and distracts

My jarring fancies with thy lugger's cry.

To WHINSEY. v. n. [whinn, Latin; from the found.] To make a noise like a horse or colt.

WHINSEY. n. f. [pman and ape, to gain honour, Saxon. Skinner. I know not whether this word was ever used seriously, and therefore perhaps it might be denominated in contempt from whin, a tool to cut whins.] A sword, in con- tempt.

He hatch'd his whinny up, that fled

When he was tall, or his steed

To WHIP. v. a. [hpeopan, Saxon, whi- pen, Dutch.

1. To strike with any thing tough and flexible.

He took

The harness'd foals, that still with horrid snook,

And plies them with the lash, and whips 'em on,

And, as he whips, upbraids 'em with his tan.

2. To sew slightly.

In both whip needles use less he.

3. To drive with lashes.

His unheard horns, and by both troops,

The kee doth back, and is well prepared

To whip his dwellers, the pamyans,

From out the circle of his territories.

Let's at up the in cages over the sea, and Lath hence those over-weening rags of traitors.

These rags'd be a rest.

Since I play'd a rest, play'd to me, and a rest top, I knew not what it was to be beaten till lastly.

4. To order every day to whip his top, as long as to make him weary, he will whip for his top, at yet

praise it him as a reward of having whip'd his top loudly quite out.

Whip every, unfortified with wine or heat

Proth'd by that flatterer, indifference.

5. To correct with lashes.

UP leave you to the hearing of the cause,

Hope you'll find good cause to whip them all.

Reason with the fellow,

Before you punish him, where he heard this,

Left you should chance to whip your morma

Hourly we see some raw pin-feather'd thing

Attempt to mount, and heroes sing

Who for bibe on whip at school

But other day, whip grammar rule.

How did he whip the hungry brave?

Who whip the winds, and made the sea his slave?

More than feting children a task, and whipping them, without any more ado, if it be not done to our fancy. Locke.

Oh chain me! whip me! let me be the scorn
Of fordid rabbles and insulting crowds!
Give me but life. Smith.

Heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and are not able to bear the pain and indignity of whipping. Swift.

5. To lash with farcacin.

They would whip me with their five wits, till I was as erelt fallen as a dried pear. Shakespeare.

6. To inwarp.

It being is firmly whipt about with small put,
that it may the easier move in the edge of the rower. Milton.

To WHIP, v. a. To take any thing nimble; always with a particle determining the style; as, out, on, up, away.
A ludicrous use.

In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hanging something fir,
He whipt his rapier out, and cries, a rat!
And in this brimful apprehension kills
The unseen good old man. Shakespeare.

She in a hurry whips up her darling under her arm. Leitch.

Ride yourself upon your hinder legs, and then stretch out your head: I can easily whip up to your horns, and so out of the wall. Leitch.

With Susan whips her linen from the rope,
Whilst the first dazling shower is born aloope.

The whipped, it lies ready for you to whip it out in a moment. Swift.

To WHIP, v. n. To move nimble. A ludicrous word.

Two friends travelling together, met a bear upon the way: the one whips up a tree, and the other throws himself flat upon the ground. Leitch.

The humble figure made a sudden start to follow, but the justice of the quorum whipped her back. Tait.

WHIP, n. f. [leop, Saxon.] An instrument of correction tough and phant.

There fit internal Pain,
And far beside him sat tumultuous State;

The one in hand no non whip did lean,
The other brandish'd a bloody knife. Spenser.

Put in every honest hand a whip,
To lash them if they slack'd through the world. Shakespeare.

Love is merely a mischievous, and defies as well a dark debate and a whip as men can do. Shakespeare.

High on her head the reins two tawny snakes,
He chain'd her rather, and her whip she flings. Dryden.

In his right hand he holds the whip, with which he is appointed to drive the hosts of the sun. Dryden.

WHIP and spur. With the utmost haste.
I wish each poleman.

Come whip and spur, and dash'd thro' them and thick. Dryden.

WHIPCORD, n. f. [whip and cord.] Cord of which laces are made.

In Raphael's mist works are many fresh boldings, often repeated, which look like to many whip cords. Dryden.

WHIPGRAFTING, n. f. [In gardening.]
A kind of grafting.

WHIPHAND, n. f. [whip and hand.] Advantage over.

The archangel, when Discord was retired, and could not be drawn from her heaven-mould'd eye, with fair words, has the whiphand of her, and drew her out with many stripes. Dryden.

WHIPLASH, n. f. The lash or small end of a whip.

Have whiplash well knotted and cartope mough Tuffe.

WHIPPER, n. f. [From whip.] One who punishes with whip.

Love is merely a whip as women do; and the reason why they are not so punished is, that the whippers are in love too. Shakespeare.

WHIPPINGPOST, n. f. [whip and post.] A pillar to which criminals are bound when they are lashed.

Could not the whippingpost prevail,
With all its rick, nor the jail,
To keep from flying scourge thy skin,
And snail tree from non gun? Hudibras.

WHIPSAW, n. f. [whip and saw.]
The whipsaw is used by joiners to saw such great pieces of wood that the hand saw will not easily reach through. Warton.

WHIPSTAFF, n. f. [On shipboard.] A piece of wood fastened to the helm, which the steersman holds in his hand to move the helm and turn the ship. Barley.

WHIPSTER, n. f. [from whip.] A nimble fellow.

I am not valiant neither;
But every puny whipster gets my sword. Shakespeare.

Give that whipster but his sword,
He takes my lord chief justice' warrant. Prior.

WHIP, for whipped.
In Whip I am never to sleep,
To be wroth than the due to be kept. Leitch.

To WHIRL, v. a. [Hebrew, Sarot;
zabelen, Dut.] To turn round rapidly.

My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel.
I know not where I am, nor what I do. Shakespeare.

He whirls his sword around without delay,
And brows through adverse foes a simple way. Dryden.

With his mill for he whirl'd it all around,
But the soft yielding air receiv'd the wound. Dryden.

Falling from on high, with bedewing sound
Whirls the black waves and rattling stones around. Addison.

With impetuous motion whirl'd space,
This magic wheel still moves, yet keeps its place. Cowley.

They have ever been taught by their senses, that the sun, with all the planets and the fixed stars,
are whirled round this little globe. Watts.

To WHIRL, v. n.
1. To run round rapidly.

Be, rapt with whirling wheels, and flames the fly
With fire not made to burn, but fairly set to dance. Spenser.

Five moons were seen to whirl,
Four faces, and the whirl did whirl about.
The other four in wondrous motion. Shakespeare.

As young stoppings whirl the top for sport
On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whirls about,
Admire'd with clamours of the beautiful rout. Dryden.

Wild and placed with their fears,
They girdling dance amidst the storming deeps;
The flood away the struggling toppling sweeps,
And men, and arms, and horses whirling bears. Smith.

2. To move hastily.

She what he twains repents no more
Than the dead rocks when the loud billows roar;
But whirl'd away to fling his hateful flight,
Hid in the foam. Dryden.

WHIRL, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Gyration; quick rotation; circular motion; rapid circunvolution.

I were well on judgments but in plays of range;
But even your journey and I should be change
With such a whirl of parts of your age.
Are not, and cannot score the moon the finger. Dryden.

Wings raise my feet; I'm pleas'd to mount on high,
Trace all the mazes of the liquid sky;
Their various turnings and their whirls declare,
And live in the vast regions of the air. Creech.

Nor whirl of time, nor flight of years, can waste Creech.

I have been watching what thoughts came up in the whirl of fancy, that were worth communicating
Pope.

How the car rattles, how its landing wheels
Smoke in the whirl; the carting loud steeds,
And in the noble dust the chariot's loft. South.

3. Any thing moved with rapid rotation.
For though in dreadful whirls we hang High on the broken wave,
I knew thou wert not flow to hear,
Nor impatient to save. Spenser.

WHIRL, n. f. [whirl and whirl.] Any thing moved rapidly round to give a blow. It is frequently used by the poets for the ancient celtus.

At whirl but he had slain many, and was now himself slain by Pollux. Leitch.

The whirl's falling blow they mingly than,
And win the race ere they begin to run. Creech.

The guardian angels of kings have been rejected, so Dares did the whirls of the sky, when they were the own to fore him by Eutelus. Dryden.

The whirl and the rapid race shall be Rever'd for Cæsar, and ordon'd by me. Dryden.

WHIRLSTONE, n. f. The patella; the cap of the knee. Amfworth.

WHIRTING, n. f. [whirl and gig.] A toy which children spin round.

He found that marble taught him percussion, and at whirl the axis in peritrochio. Arch. and Pope.

That once they gave them their beginning,
And let this whirl gig whirling. Prior.

WHIRRING, n. f. [whirl and gig.] A place where the water moves circularly, and draws whatever comes within the circle toward its centre;
a vortex.

Poor Tom! whom the foul hand had led through ford and whirlpool over bar; and whirlpool. Shakespeare.

In the whirlpool is profound
Down sunk they, like a falling stone,
By raging whirlpools overthrow. Spenser.

This calm of heaven, the mermaid's melody,
Told an untold whirlpool draws you fast. Dryden.

And in a moment looks you Said forth, ye wide! and forth you whirling thought.

I let it turn with empty notions fraught
Of many columns every moment broke,
Of whirling whirlpools, and of spheres of smoke. Prior.

There might arise to be voracious motions or at whirlpools in the matter of the chaos, whereby the atoms must be thrust and crowded to the middle of these whirlpools, and there conspire one another into great solid bodies. Bentley.

WHIRLWIND, n. f. [whirl and wind, Germ.]
A stormy wind moving circularly.

In the very instant and whirlwind of your passion, beget a temperance that may give it smoothness. Shakespeare.

With whirlwinds from beneath the told the ship.

And bare expos'd the bosom of the deep. Dryden.

WHIRRING, adj. A word formed in imitation of the sound expressed by it.

From the lake the whirling pheasant springs,
And mounts exulting on triumphant wings. Pope.

WHISK, n. f. [whischen, to wipe, Germ.]
1. A small belem or broth.

The white of an egg, though in part transparent, yet being long agitated with a whisk or spoon, loses its transparency. Boyle.

If you break any china with the top of the whisk
on the whisk-tree, gather up the fragments. Swift.

2. A part of a woman's dress.

An easy means to prevent being one farthing the worse for the abatement of interest, is wearing a whisk instead of a point de Venise. Chad.

To WHISK, v. a. [whischen, to wipe, Germ.]
1. To sweep with a whisk all before.

2. To move nimble; to whisk.

Cardan believ'd great states could
Upon the tip of the head's tail's end;
That, as the whisk it it wards the fin.
Strow'd mightily rapiers up and down. Hudibras.

WHISKER, n. f. [from whisk.] The hair growing on the upper lip unshaven; the mustachro.

A sacrifice to fall of state,
Whose thread of life the fatal filters
Did twist together with its whiskers.
Behold four kings, in majesty rever'd,
With hoary whiskers and a forky beard. Pope
A painter added a pair of whiskers to the face. Addison

TO WHISPER. v. n. [uisperen, Dutch.]
To speak with a low voice, so as not to be heard but by the ear close to the speaker; to speak with suspicion or timorous caution.

He sometimes with fearful countenance would define the King to look to himself; for that all the court and city were full of whisperings, and expectation of some sudden change. Shakespeare
All that hate me whisper together against me. Pope

In speech of man, the whispering or faltering, whether louder or softer, is an interior sound; but the speaking out is an exterior sound, and the more you can never make a tone, nor sing, in a whispering, but in speech you may. Bacon

The king Aceffis calls;
Then softly whisper'd in her faithful ear,
And bade his daughters at the rites appear. Pope
It is as offensive to speak wit in a fool's company, as it would be ill manners to whisper in it; he is displeased at both, because he is ignorant of what is said. Pope
The hollow whispering breeze, the phant'ral rills
Purle down amid the twisted roots. Thompson

TO WHISPER. v. a.
1. To address in a low voice.

When they talk of him, they shush then heads,
And whisper one another in the ear. Shakespeare
Give softer words, the grief that does not speak
Whispers the overhaught heart, and bids it break. Shakespeare

He first whispers the man in the ear, that such a man should think such a end. Bacon
The steward whispered the young Templar, that's true to my knowledge. Laurel

2. To utter in a low voice.
You have heard of the news abroad, I mean the whispered ones, for they are yet but casual arguments. Shakespeare

Sit and cut your bread,
Nor whisper more a word, or get ye gone,
And weep without doors. Chapman
They might buzz and whisper it one to another, and, tacitly withdrawing from the apostles, note it about the city. Bentley

3. To prompt secretly.
Charles the emperor,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
For 't was indeed his colour, but he came
To whisper Wolsey, here makes visitation. Shakespeare
WHISPER. n. f. [from the verb.] A low soft voice; cautious and timorous speech.
The extension is more in tones than in speech; therefore the inward voice or whisper cannot give a tone. Bacon

Strictly observe the first hints and whispers of good and evil that pass in the heart, and this will keep conscience quick and vigilant. South

Soft whispers through th' assembly went. Dryden
He uncall'd, his patron to controul,
Direful'd the secret whispers of his soul. Dryden
With such like false whispers, in former reigns,
the ears of princes have been poisoned. Davenant

WHISPERER. n. f. [from whisper.]

1. One that speaks low.
2. A private talker; a teller of secrets; a conveyer of intelligence.

Kings trust in eunuchs hath rather been as to good spies and good whisperers than good magistrates. Bacon

[This word is called by Skinner, who misdoth erre, an interjection commanding silence, and so it is commonly used; but Shakespeare uses it as a verb, and Milton as an adjective or a participle.]

3. Are silent.

Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands;
Cord'ed when you have, and lift,
The wild waves whift. Shakespeare

2. Still; silent; put to silence.
The winds, with wonder whift,
Smoothly the waters kiss'd.
Whispering new joys to the mild ocean. Milton

3. Be still.
WHIST. n. f. A game at cards, requiring close attention and silence; vulgarly pronounced whifk.
The chessman add to play at whift and twobbers. Swift

Whift awhile
Walls his grave round, beneath a cloud of smoke
Wealth'd to grant from the pipe. Thomson

TO WHISTLE. v. n. [hijstlan, Saxon; hifulo, Latin.]

1. To form a kind of musical sound by an articulate modulation of the breath.
I've watch'd and travel'd hard.
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle. Shakespeare

Let one whistle at the one end of a trunk, and hold your ear at the other, and the sound shall strike to sleep as you can scarce endure it. Bacon
While the plowman near at hand
His whistles o'er the furrow'd land. Milton

Shouldst Bertram found his trumpets,
And Fortinbras but whistle through his fingers,
He draws his army off.
He whistled as he went for want of thought. Dryden

The ploughman leaves the talk of day,
And trading homeward whistles on the way. Gay

2. To make a sound with a small wind instrument.
3. To sound shrill.

His big manly voice
Changing again toward childish tinkle pipes,
He whistles in his hand. Shakespeare

Soft whispers run along the leafy woods,
And mountains whistle to the murm'ring floods. Dryden

Rhetus from the hearth a burning brand
Selects, and whirling waves, till from his hand
The fire took flame, then dash'd it from the right
On tan Charax's temple, near the fight
Then whistling past came on. Dryden

When wings of death in whistling arrows fly,
With thou, thought wounded, yet undaunted lay,
Perform thy part, and share the dangerous day. Prior

The wild winds whistle, and the billows roar,
The splitting raft the horrors to my eye. Pope
TO WHISTLE. v. a. To call by a whistle.

Let him whistle them backwards and forwards,
till he is weary
He chanced to miss his dog: we stood full till he had whistled him up. Addison

When humble pride for flattery makes demands,
May dance by dance be whistled off my hands! Pope

WHISTLE. n. f. [hijstle, Saxon.]

1. Sound made by the modulation of the breath in the mouth.

My fire in caves confirms the wind,
Can with a breath their clam'rous rage appease;
They fear his whistle, and forsake the seas. Dryden

2. A sound made by a small wind instrument.

3. The mouth; the organ of whistling.
Let's drink the other cup to wet our whistles,
and to sing away all sad thoughts. Watson

4. A small wind instrument.
The masters and pilots were so astonished, that they knew not how to direct, and it they knew, they could scarcely, when they directed, hear their own whistle. Sidney

Behold
Upon the hepp'n tackle shipboys climbing;
Hear the thrill whistle, which doth order give
To founds confus'd. Shakespeare

Small whistles, or shepherds' oaten pipes, give a found, because of their extreme loudness, when by the air is more pent than in a wider pipe. Bacon

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew.
The bells she gungled, and the whistle blew. Pope

5. The noise of winds.

6. A call, such as sportsmen use to their dogs.

Madam, here comes my lord.—
—I have been worth the whistle. Shakespeare

WHISTLER. n. f. [from whistle.] One who whistles.

The prize was a gnuca, to be conferred upon the ablest whistler, who could whistle clearly, and go through his tune without laughing. Addison

WHIT. n. f. [white, a thing; aphte, any thing, Saxon.] A point; a jot.

We have, and are no whit repaid. Shakespeare
Her sacred book with blood yew'd,
That none could read except the old man teach,
She into him distil'd every whit,
And heavenly documents thereof did preach. Spenser

The motive came of doing it is not in words, but came thus as if the wind should drive a feather in the air; we no whit furthering that whereby we are driven. Hooker

Although the lord became the king's to him, his country was no whit reformed thereby, but remained in the former barbarism. Bacon

Nature's full blessings would be well dispens'd in unsuperfluous, even proportion.
And the whit enumber'd with her store. Milton

It does not me a whit displease,
That the rich all honours seize. Cowley

In accounts of an art or trade, it ought to be any enquirer, if they can be brought any whit to one another. Prior

It is every whit as honourable to admit a good minister, as to oppose a bad one. Addison

WHIT. adj. [white, Saxon; wt, Dutch.]

1. Having such an appearance as arises from the mixture of all colours; grey.

When the paper was held near to any colour than to the rest, it appeared of that colour to which it approached nearest, but when it was equally, almost equally, distant from all the colours, whether it might be equally illuminated by them all, it appeared white. Newton

Why round our coaches crowd the white gloves because? Pope

The strongest repellents are the whites of new-laid eggs beaten to a froth with alum. Hogman

When latex among the stars do grow,
Thou into the close in time dost creep;
And there, with piercing eye,
Through the firm shell and the thick white dost spy
Yours to come a-forming lie,
Close in their sacred fecundine asleep. Colley

What principle manages the white and yolk of an egg into such a variety of textures, as is requisite to furnish a chick? Boyle

The two in most regions represent the yolk and the membrane that lies next above it, for the exterior region of the earth is as the shell of the egg, and the abyss under it as the white that lies under the shell. Eusebius

4. The white part of the eye.
Our general humilit
Sacrifices himself with 's hands,
And turns up th' white o' th' eye to his discourse. Shakespeare

There lives within the very flame of love A kind of wick or fuel that will abate it.

Bodies are inflamed wholly and immediately, without any wick to help the inflammation.

Little unions of oil or melted wax continually ascend space up the wick of a burning candle.

The fungous parcels about the wicks of candles only signify a moist and pluvial air about them.

WICKED. adj. [Of this common word the etymology is very obscure: picca, is an rackanter; paccan, is to oppress; piman, to curse; piced, is crooked; all these, however, Skinner rejects for virtutis, Latin. Perhaps it is a compound of pic, vile, bad, and head; malum caput.]

Given to vice; not good; flagitious; morally bad.

The dwelling place of the wicked shall come to nought.

And as the better spirit, when the wicked is a scorn of death, dath show the wicked soul.

So when the wicked soul dath show the wicked soul, Ev'n then she proves her own eternity.

He of their wicked ways shall them admonish.

But since thy veins paternal virtue flow, Go and succeed! the rivals aims despise;

For never, never wicked man was vile.

W I D

1. It is a word of ludicrous or slight blame.

That same wicked bastard of Venus, that blind rascally boy, that abuses every one's eyes because his own are out, let him be judge how deep I am in love. Shakespeare.

3. Cursed; baneful; pernicious; bad in effect, as medicinal things are called virtuous.

The wicked weed which there the fox did lay, From underneath his head he took away! Spenser.
As wicked dew as e'er my mother breath'd
With raven's feather from unwholesome fen,
Drop on you both. Shakespeare.

- WICKEDLY. adv. [from wicked.] Criminally; corruptly; badly.

I would now send him where they all should see,
Clear as the light, his heart flame; where no man
Could be so wickedly or fondly stupid,
But should cry out, law law, touch'd, felt wickedness. Ben Jonson.

He behaved himself with great modesty and wonderful repentance; being convinced in his conscience that he had done wickedly. Clarendon.
That thou may'st be the better bring about Thy wishes, thou art wickedly devout. Dryden.

'Tis phrase absurd to call a villain great:
Who wickedly is wise or madly brave,
Is but the more a fool, the more a knave. Pope.

- WICKEDNESS. n. f. [from wicked.] Corruption of manners; guilt; moral ill.

It is not good that children should know any wickedness; old folks have discretion and know the world. Shakespeare.

These tents thou saw'st so pleasant, were the tents
Of wickedness; wherein shall dwell his race
Who slew his brother. Milton.

- WICKER. adj. [vigre, a twig, Danish; twiggen, Dutch.] Made of small sticks.

Each one a little wicker basket had,
Made of fine twigs entangled curiously,
In which they gather'd flowers. Spenser.

Then quick did drofs
His halfe milke up for cheere, and in a presse
Of wicker prest it. Chapman.

The long broad shields, made up of wicker rods, which are commonly used among the northern Irish, but especially among the Scots, are brought from the Scythians. Spenser.

If your influence be quite damn'd up
With black usurping mist, some gentle taper,
Though a rush candle from the wicker hole
Of some clay habitation, visit us
With thy long-level'd rule of streaming light. Milton.

A foolish painter drew January sitting in a wicker chair, with four nightcaps on, by the fire; and without doors green trees, as if it had been in the midst of July. Percy.

- WICKET. n. f. [wicked, Welsh; guiglet, Fr. wicket, Dutch.] A small gate.

When none yielded, her unruly page
With his rude claws the wicket open rent,
And let her in. Spenser.

These wickets of the soul are pluck'd on high,
Because all sounds do lightly mount aloft. Davies.
Now St. Peter at heaven's wicket seems To wait them with his keys. Milton.

The cave was now a common way;
The wicket, often open'd, knew the key. Dryden.
The chattering with dissenters, and dodging about this or the other ceremony, is like opening a few wickets, by which no more than one can pass in at a time. South.

- WIDE. adj. [pibe, Saxon; wid, Dutch.]

1. Broad; extended far each way.

He wand'ring long a wider circle made,
And many-langw'd nations he survey'd. Pope.

2. Broad to a certain degree: as, three inches wide.

3. Deviating; remote.

Many of the fathers were far wide from the understanding of this place. Raleigh.

Consider the absurdities of that distinction between the act and the obliquity; and the contrary being so wide from the truth of scripture and the attributes of God, and so noxious to good life, we may certainly conclude, that to the perpetration of whatsoever sin there is not at all any predestination of God. Hammond.

To move
His laughter at their quaint opinions wide. Milton.
On wide of nature must he act a part,
Make love in tropes, in bombast break his heart. Tickle.

- WIDE. adv.
1. At a distance. In this sense wide seems to be sometimes an adverb.

A little wide
There was a holy chapel edified,
Wherein the hermit wont to lay
His holy things each morn and even tide. Spenser.
The Chinese, a people whose way of thinking seems to be as wide of ours in Europe as their country does. Temple.

2. With great extent.
- Of all these bounds enrich'd
With plentiful rivers, and wide fertile meads,
We make thee lady. Shakespeare.
On the east side of the garden place
Cherubic watch, and of a sword the flame
Wide-waving; all approach far off to fright. Milton.

She open'd, but to shut
Excell'd her power, the gates wide open flood. Milton.

With huge two-handed sway
Brandish'd aloft, the horn'd edge came down, Wide waving. Milton.
The south wind rose, and with black wings Wide hovering, all the clouds together drove From under heav'n. Milton.

Stretch'd at ease the panting lady lies,
To shun the fervour of meridian flies;
While sweating slaves catch ev'ry breeze of air,
And with wide-spreading fans refresh the fair. Gay.

Yet wide was spread their fame in ages past,
And poets once had promis'd they should last. Pope.

- WIDELY. adv. [from wide.]

1. With great extent each way.
- Any that considers how minute the intervals of the chaos are, in proportion to the bulk of the atoms, will hardly induce himself to believe, that particles so widely disseminated could ever throng
one another to a compact texture. Bentley.

2. Remotely; far.
- Let him exercise the freedom of his reason, and his mind will be strengthened, and the light which the remote parts of truth will give to one another, will to assist his judgment, that he will seldom be widely out. Locke.

- To WIDEN. v. a. [from wide.] To make wide; to extend.

So now the gates are open; now prove good seconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the flyers. Shakespeare.
These accidents, when they first happen, seem but small and contemptible; but by degrees they branch out and widen themselves into a numerous train of mischievous consequences. South.

He was accustomed to sleep with a peaceable nose, fastening in his slumbers the wrinkles of it, and the anger which commonly mounted to that part; but now his nostrils were widened to the last degree of fury. Dryden.

- To WIDEN. v. n. To grow wide; to extend itself.

It is in this that the species of brutes are distinguished from man, and that proper difference wherein they are wholly separated, and which at last widens to a vast distance. Locke.

With her the temple ev'ry moment grew,
Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend,
And arches widen, and long aisles extend. Pope.

- WIDENESS. n. f. [from wide.]

1. Breadth; large extent each way.
- The rugged hair began to fall away;
The sweetness of her eyes did only stay, Milton.

Though not so large;
The wideness of her jaws.

2. Comparative breadth.

Within the same annual time, the number of the earth is carried above fifty times as far round the orbis magnus, whose wideness we now assume to be twenty thousand territorial diameters. Hentley.

- WIDGEON. n. f. A waterfowl, not unlike a wild duck, but not so large.

Among the first sort we reckon creyfers, curlews, and widgeons. Curre.

- WIDOW. n. f. [pibpa, Saxon; weduw, Dutch; weddu, Welsh; vidua, Latin.] A woman whose husband is dead.

To take the widow,
Exasperates, makes mad her sister Goneril. Shakespeare.
Catharine no more

Shall be call'd queen; but princess dowager,
And widow to prince Arthur. Shakespeare.

Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd,
Your widow-dolours likewise be unwept. Shakespeare.
And will she yet debate her eyes on me,
That crop the golden prime of this sweet prince,
And made her widow to a woful bed? Shakespeare.

And you, fair widow, who stay here alive,
Since he to much rejoices, cease to grieve;
Your joys and pains were wont the time to be,
Begin not now, blest pair! to disagree. Conway.
The barren they more miserable make,
And from the widow, all her comfort take. Sandys.

He warns the widow, and her household gods,
To seek a refuge in remote abodes. Dryden.
Who has the paternal power whilst the widow queen is with child? Locke.

- To WIDOW. v. a. [from widow.]

1. To deprive of a husband.
- In this city he Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury. Shakespeare.

You are beguil'd,
Both you and I, for Romeo is call'd;
He made you for a highway to my bed;
But I, a maid, the maiden widdow'd. Shakespeare.

Thy little cure to mend my widow'd nights,
Has forc'd me to recourte of marriage rites,
To fill an empty side. Dryden.

2. To endow with a widow-right.

For his possessions,
Although by confiscation they are ours,
We do inflate and widow you withal,
To buy you a better husband. Shakespeare.

3. To strip of any thing good.

The widow'd ale in mourning
Dies up her tears. Dryden.
Inclement weather and frosty blasts deface
The blithe some year, trees of their flourish'd leaves
Are widow'd, dreary forms o'er all prevail. Philips.

- WIDOWER. n. f. [from widow.] One who has lost his wife.

The king, sealing up all thoughts of love under the image of her memory, remained a widower
many years after. Shakespeare.

The man consents are had, and here we'll fly
To see our widower's second marriage day. Shakespeare.

They that marry, as they that shall get no children; and they that marry not, as the widower. 2 I John.

- WIDOWHOOD. n. f. [from widow.]

1. The state of a widow.

Cecropia, having in her widowhood taken this young Anaxia into her charge, had taught her to think that there is no widowhood but in including both heaven and earth in one's self. Shakespeare.

Ne ween my right with strength adown to tread,
Through weakness of my widowhood us woe,
For truth is strong. Spenser.

She employed her left widowhood to work no less bountiful than a stable. Carew.

'Tis of great consequence to abstain from things deceivable, that a person may be content to leave them; as they who are easily beguile life prefer vicious mirth before widowhood. Watson.

Church thy barren widowhood with the gold
Of matrimonial treasure; so farewell. Milton.

WIDOW. Not in use.
 I'll assure her of
 Her ~~widow~~, be it that she survives me,
 In all my lands. Shakespeare.
WIDOWHUNTER. n. f. [widow and hunter.] One who courts widows for a jointure.
 The widowhunters about town often find them great diversion. Addison.
WIDOWMAKER. n. f. [widow and maker.] One who deprives women of their husbands.

It grieves my soul
 That I must draw this metal from my side
 To be a widowmaker. Shakespeare.
WIDOW-WAIL. n. f. [widow and wail.] A plant. Milner.
WIDTH. n. f. [from wide.] Breadth;
 wideness. A low word.
 For the width of the morrow's gage this side, then for the tenant gage on that end of the quarter you intend the tenant shall be made. Mason.
 Let thy vines in intervals be set;
 Indulge their width, and add a roomy space,
 That their extremest vines may leaved embrace.
Duden.

WIELD. v. a. [pealban, Saxon, to manage in the hand]
 1. To use with full command, as a thing not too heavy for the holder.
 His looks are full of peaceful majesty,
 His head by nature fram'd to wear a crown,
 His hand to wield a scepter, and himself
 Likely in time to bleat a regal throne. Shakespeare.
 'Mongst forests, hills, and floods, was ne'er such heave and move,
 Since Albion's laid arms against the son of Jove
 Drayton
 There is that hand bolden'd to Elad and war,
 That must the sword in wondrous actions wield.
Daniel.
 They are in the dark before they are aware, and then they make at note only with terms; which,
 like too heavy weapons that they cannot wield, carry their strokes beyond their aim. Dugby.
 The least of whom could wield
 These elements, and arm him with the force
 Of all their regions. Milton.
 Part wield their arms, part curb the foaming flood.
Milton.
 Rome's great senate could not wield that sword,
 Which of the conquer'd world had made the lord;
 What hope had ours, while yet their power was
 new,
 To rule victorious armies, but by you? H.
 He worthily, after him, his sword to wield.
 Or war his armour, or sustain his shield. Dugby.
 2. To handle: in an ironical sense.
 Bate Hungarian wight, wilt thou the tug of wield?
Shakespeare.

WIELDY. adj. [from wield.] Manage-able.
WIERY. adj. [from wire.]
 1. Made of wire: it were better written wiry.
 Your gown going off such beautiful state reveals
 As when through flow'ry meads the lion's shadow steals;
 Off with that wiery coronet, and show
 The hairy diadem which on your head doth grow.
Daniel.
 2. Drawn into wire.
 Polymnia shall be drawn with her hair hanging loose about her shoulders, resembling wiery gold.
Peckham.

3. [from pen, a pool.] Wet; wearish, moist. Obsolete.
 Where but by chance a silver drop bath fall'n,
 Ev'n to that drop ten thousand wiery friends
 Do glew themselves in wiery gels. Shakespeare.
WIRE. n. f. plural wires, wire, Sax. wir,
 Dutch.]
 1. A woman that has a husband.

There's no bottom, none,
 In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
 Your matrons, and your maids could not fill up
 The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare.
 The kings of Spain have been used to say, that they loved the East Indies for their mistresses only, in whose favours they could patiently enough endure a rival; but esteemed America as their wife, in whose love they could not brook a competitor without soul dishonour. Heylin.
 The wife, where danger or dishonour lurks,
 Safe and securest by her husband stays. Milton.
 The wife her husband murders, he the wife.
Dryden.

Fond of his friend, and civil to his wife. Pope.
 2. It is used for a woman of low employment.
 Strawberry wives lay two or three great strawberries at the mouth of their pot, and all the rest are little ones. Bacon.
WIG. n. f. Wig, being a termination in the names of men, signifies war, or else a hero; from piga, a word of that signification. Gibson.
WIG. n. f. [contracted from periwig.]
 1. False hair worn on the head.
 Triumphant tories and desponding whigs Forget their leuds, and join to save their wigs.
Swift.
 2. A sort of cake. Ainsworth.
WIGHT. n. f. [yibz, Saxon.] A person;
 a being. Now used only in irony or contempt.
 Beware the witch! with venomous wight she stings.
 Tedium is hell; but flies the grasp of love,
 With wings more momentary swift than thought.
Shakespeare.

This world below did need one wight,
 Which might thereof distinguish every part.
Daniel.
 This meaner wights, of trust and credit bare,
 Not to respected, could not look t' effect. Daniel.
 A wight he was, whose very light would Enoble him mirror of knight-hood. Hudibras.
 The water does all tane of living wight. Milton.
 How couldst thou suffer thy devoted knight,
 On thy own day, to fall by her oppress'd,
 The wight of all the world who lov'd thee best?
Dryden.
 His station he yielded up to a wight as disagre-able as himself. Addison.
 In face's full bloom lies Florio down at night,
 And wiles at day a most glorious wight.
 The tump's dead. Young.
WIGHT. adj. Swift; nimble. Out of use.
 He was so wimble and so wight,
 From bright to bright he leaped light,
 And oft the punies latched. Spenser.
WIGHT. an mutual in the names of men, signifies strong; nimble; luty; being purely Saxon. Gibson.

WIGHTLY. adv. [from wight.] Swiftly;
 nimbly. Obsolete.
 Her wight her, while it was day light,
 But now her is a most wretched wight;
 For day that was wight a path,
 And now at last the night doth last. Spenser.
WILD. adj. Wild, Saxon; wild, Dutch.]
 1. Not tame; not domestic.
 For I am here, and born to tame you, Kate;
 And bring you from a wild to a kate,
 Conformable as other household wilds. Shakespeare.
 Winter's not gone yet, if the wild gets by that way. Shakespeare.
 All beasts of the earth since wild. Milton.
 2. Propagated by nature; not cultivated.
 Whence or will make a wild tree a garden tree,
 will make a garden tree to have his core or stone.
Bacon.
 Grose grass or wild tansy is a weed that brings no very subject to. Notimer.
 The wild bee breeds in the flocks of old willows, in which they first bore a canal, and furnish afterwards with hangings, made of rose leaves: and to finish their work, divide the whole into several rooms or nests. Grew.

3. Desert; uninhabited.
 The wild beast where he wons in forest wild.
Milton.

4. Savage; uncivilized: used of persons, or practices.
 Affairs that walk,
 As they say spirits do, at midnight, have
 In them a wilder nature than the business
 That looks dispatch by day. Shakespeare.
 Though the foundation destroyed man and beast generally, yet some few wild inhabitants of the woods escaped. Bacon.
 When they might not converse with any civil men without peril of their lives, whither should they fly but into the woods and mountains, and there live in a wild and barbarous manner.
Daniel.

May those already curst Essexian plains,
 Where hasty death and pining sickness reigns,
 Prove as a desert, and none there make stay
 But savage beasts, or men as wild as they. Waller.
 5. Turbulent; tempestuous; irregular.
 His passions and his virtues lie confus'd,
 And mixt together in so wild a tumult,
 That the whole man is quite desigur'd in him.
Addison.

6. Licentious; ungoverned.
 The barbarous dissonance
 Of that wild rout that tore the Thracian bard.
Milton.
 Valour grown wild by pride, and pow'r by rage,
 Did the true chains of majesty impair:
 Rome by degrees advancing more in age,
 Shew'd sad remains of what had once been fair.
Prior.

7. Inconstant; mutable; fickle.
 In the ruling passion, these alone,
 The wild are constant, and the cunning known.
Pope.

8. Inordinate; loose.
 Other bars he lays before me,
 My riots pull, my wild torments. Shakespeare.
 Besides, thou art a beau, what's that my child?
 A top well dress'd, extravagant, and wild:
 She that craves her due has it impertinence,
 And in her asking more of common sense.
Dryden.

9. Uncouth; strange.
 What are these,
 So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
 That look not like th' inhabitants of th' earth,
 And yet are on't? Shakespeare.

10. Done or made without any consistent order or plan.
 With mountains as with weapons arm'd, they make Wild work in heav'n. Milton.
 The sea was very necessary to the ends of providence, and it would have been a very wild world had it been without. Woodward.

11. Merely imaginary.
 As universal as their appetite to be, an effectual remedy might be applied. I am not at present upon a wild speculative project, but such a one as may be easily put in execution. Swift.

WILD. n. f. [from the adjective.] A desert; a tract uncultivated and uninhab-ited.
 Whence the scorching sky
 Dost singe the sandy wilds of spacious Barbary.
Drayton.

We sometimes,
 Who dwell the wild, constrain'd by want come
 forth
 To town or village night. Milton.
 This gentle knight
 Forsook his cosy couch at early day,
 And to the woods and wilds pursued his way. Dryden.

Then Lybia first, of all her moisture drain'd,
 Became a barren waste, a wild of sand. Addison.
 Is there a nation in the wilds of Africa,
 Amidst the barren rocks and burning sands,
 That does not tremble at the Roman name? Addison.

You rais'd these hallow'd walls; the desert
smil'd,

And paradise was open'd in the wild. Pope.
WILD Basil. n. f. [acinus, Lat.] A plant.
Miller.

WILD Cucumber. n. f. [elaterium, Lat.]
A plant.

The branches are somewhat like those of the cucumber, but have no tendrils, the fruit is prickly, and when ripe bursts with great elasticity, and abounds with fetid juice. Miller.

WILD Olive. n. f. [oleagnus, Latin; from laia, oliva, and oleos, viter.] This plant hath leaves like those of the chaste tree, and a fruit like an olive. Miller.

To WILDER. v. a. [from wild.] To lose or puzzle in an unknown or pathless tract.

The little courtiers, who ne'er come to know
The depth of factions, as in mazes go,
Where interests meet, and crofs to oth', that they
With too much care are wilder'd in the way.

O thou! who free'st me from my doubtful state,
Long lost and wilder'd in the maze of fate,
Be present still. Pope.

WILDERNESS. n. f. [from wild.]
1. A desert; a tract of solitude and savage-ness.

He travell'd through wide wasteful ground,
That nought but desert wildernesses flow'd all around.

When as the land she saw no more appear,
But a wild wilderness of waters deep,
Then 'gan she greatly to lament and weep.

O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
When that my care could not withhold thy riots,
What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?
O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,
Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants!

But who can always on the billows lie?
The wat'ry wilderness yields no supply. Waller.
All those animals have been obliged to change their woods and wildernesses for lodgings in cities.
Arluhot and Pope.

2. The state of being wild or disorderly.
Not in use.

The paths and how'rs doubt not but our joint hands

Will keep from wilderness with ease. Milton.

WILDFIRE. n. f. [wild and fire.] A composition of inflammable materials, easy to take fire, and hard to be extinguished.

When thou rain'st up, Godhill in the night to catch my horse, I did think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus, or a ball of wildfire. Shakspeare.

Though brimstone, pitch, wildfire, burn equally, and are hard to quench, yet they make no such fiery wind as gunpowder. Bacon.

Yet shall it in his boiling stomach turn
To bitter poison, and like wildfire burn;
He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd.

No matter in the world so proper to write with as wildfire, as no characters can be more legible than those which are read by their own light. Addison.
In flames, like Semel's, he brought to bed,
While opening hell spouts wildfire at your head.

WILDGOOSECHASE. n. f. A pursuit of something as unlikely to be caught as the wild goose.

If our wits run the wildgoosechace, I have done;
for thou hast more of the wildgoose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakspeare.

Let a man consider the time, money, and vexation, that this wildgoosechase has cost him, and then say, what have I gotten to answer all this expence, but giddy frolick? L'Estrange.

WILDLING. n. f. [wildelinghe, Dutch.] A wild four apple.

Ten ruddy wildings in the wood I found,
And stood on tip-toes, reaching from the ground.

The red streak, of all cyder fruit, hath obtained the preference, being but a kind of wilding, never pleasing to the palate. Mortimer.

The wilding's fibres are contriv'd
To draw th' earth's purest spirit, and resist its ferulence. Philips.

WILDLY. adv. [from wild.]

1. Without cultivation.
That which grows wildly of itself, is worth nothing. More.

2. Without tameness; with ferity.
3. With disorder; with perturbation or distracton.

Put your discourse into some frame, and start not to wildly from my affair. Shakspeare.
Mrs. Page, at the door, sweating, blowing, and looking wildly, would needs speak with you.

Young mothers wildly stare with fear oppress'd,
And strain their helpless infants to their breast.

His fever being come to a height, he grew delirious, and talked very wildly. Female Quirre.

4. Without attention; without judgment;
heedlessly.

As th' unthought accident is guilty
Of what we wildly do, to we protect Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows. Shakspeare.

5. Capriciously; irrationally.
Who is there so wildly sceptical as to question whether the sun shall rise in the east? Wilkins.

6. Irregularly.
She, wildly wanton, wears by night away
The sign of all our labours done by day. Dryden.

WILDNESS. n. f. [from wild.]
1. Rudeness; disorder like that of uncultivated ground.

The heath, which was the third part of our plot,
I will to be framed, as much as may be, to a natural wildness. Bacon.

Vainly thou tell'st me what the woman's care
Shall in the wildness of the wood prepare. Prior.

2. Inordinate vivacity; irregularity of manners.

This fume starv'd justice hath done nothing but priced to me of the wildness of his youth, and the seats he hath done about Fumal-drect; and every third word a lie. Shakspeare.

He is giv'n
To sports, to wildness, and much company. Shakspeare.

3. Savageness; brutality.
He came in like a wild man, but such a wildness as shew'd his eye-sight had tamed him; full of withered leaves, which, though they fell not, still threaten'd falling. Sidney.

4. Ferity; the state of an animal untamed;
contrary to tameness.

5. Uncultivated state.
Their wildness life, and quitting nature's part,
Obey the rules and discipline of art. Dryden.

6. Deviation from a settled course; irregularity.

A delirium is but a short wildness of the imagination; a settled irregularity of fancy is distracton and madness. Watts.

7. Alienation of mind.
Ophelia, I wish
That your good beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlet's wildness; so shall I hope your virtues
May bring him to his wonted way again.

WILDSERVICE. n. f. [crategus, Latin.]
A plant. Miller.

WILE. n. f. [pile, Saxon; wiel, Islandick.]
A deceit; a fraud; a trick; a strata-gem; a practice artful, sly, and inlidious.

Their leader by his wiles had much obtain'd,
And done much mischief on the English state. Dryden.

My sentence is for open war;
More unexpert, I boast not; yet
Contrive who need.

Life essay'd the surest wile,
Gilding itself with Laura's smile. Rastomon.
So Sforza, curs'd with a too fertile brain,
Lost by his wiles the pow'r his wit did gain.

The head of man is so full of wiles, artifices, and deceit, there is no guessing at what he is from his speeches. Addison.

Wildom's above suspecting wiles,
The queen of learning gravely smiles. Swift.

WILFUL. adj. [will and full.]

1. Stubborn; contumacious; perverse; inflexible.

The wilful never want woe. Proteus.
2. Done or suffered by design.
Stenobea herself did choak
With wilful cord, for wanting of her will.

Thou to me
Art all things under heav'n, all places thou,
Who for my wilful crime art banish'd hence.

The silent stranger stood amaz'd to see Contempt of wealth, and wilful poverty. Dryden.

By chance he ancient amities forgot,
Or else expung'd them with one wilful blot;
Nor knew he God nor man, nor faith, nor friends,
But for by-purposes and worldly ends. Ilave.

WILFULLY. adv. [from wilful.]
1. Obstinately; stubbornly.

The mother, who being determinately, least I should say of a great lady wilfully, bent to marry her to Demagoras, tried all ways which a witty and hard-hearted mother could devise. Sidney.

Evil could he conceal her fire, and wilfully perfected the in it. Sidney.

Religion is matter of our freest choice; and it men will obstinately and wilfully set themselves against it, there is no remedy. Tillotson.

2. By design; on purpose.
That will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, through all difficulties. Hammond.

If you do not wilfully pass over any of your greater offences, but confess particularly, and repent terionally, of them, God will more easily pass by your lesser infirmities. Bishop Taylor.

This let him know;
Left, wilfully offending, he pretend Surprised.

WILFULNESS. n. f. [from wilful.] Obstinacy; stubbornness; perverseness.

So full of wilfulness and self-living is our nature, that without some definitive sentence, which, being given, may stand, small hope there is that strifes will end. Hooker.

Thy causeless ruth repress;
He that his sorrow fought through wilfulness
And his too tender'd would release again,
Deceives to misle his toly's fruit. Spenser.

Never hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,
As in this king. Shakspeare.

Sins of presumption are such as proceed from pride, arrogance, wilfulness, and haughtiness of man's heart. Perkins.

A stiff and stubborn obstinacy is not so much firmness and resolution, as wilfulness. L'Estrange.

That is not hastily to be interpreted obstinacy or wilfulness, which is the natural product of their age. Locke.

WILLY. adv. [from wily.] By strata-gem; fraudulently.

They did work willy, and went and made as if they had been ambassadors. Joshua.

WILINESS. n. f. [from wily.] Cunning;
guile.

The ungodly, for his own lust, doth persecute the poor: let them be taken in the crafty wiliness that they have imagined. James.

She supplied the weakness of force by wiliness of art, and made a treaty. Howell.

WILL. n. f. [will, Saxon; wille, Dutch.]
1. That power by which we desire and purpose; volition.

will naturally, under this corrupt state, I do not consider. Hammond.
The will cannot be constrained. Perkins.

Two principal fountains there are of human actions, knowledge and will; which will, in things tending towards any end, is termed choice. Hooker.

2. Choice; arbitrary determination.

Will is the power which the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it, or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, and vice versa. Locke.

Is it her nature, or is it her will,

To be so cruel to an humble foe?

If nature, then she may it mend with skill;

If will, then she at will may will forego. Spenser.

These things have a few of wisdom in will, worship and humility. Coffinius.

Will holds the scepter in the soul,

And on the passions of the heart doth reign. Davies.

The truth is, such a man understands by his will, and believes a thing true or false, merely as it agrees or disagrees with a violent inclination; and therefore, whilst that inclination lasts in its strength, he discovers nothing of the different degrees of evidence. Atterbury.

3. Discretion; choice.

Religion was observed in the beginning of the world, before there were civil laws amongst them; I mean any other than the mere wills of their princes and governors. Wilkens.

Go, then, the guilty at thy will chastise. Pope.

4. Command; direction.

At his first sight the mountains are shaken, and at his will the south wind bloweth. Ecclesiastes.

Our prayers should be according to the will of God; they should have nothing in them but what is wise, and holy, and heavenly. Law.

5. Disposition; inclination; desire.

I make bold to press upon you with so little preparation.

—You're welcome; what's your will?

Shakespeare.

He hath a will, he hath a power to perform. Drummond.

He said, and with so good a will to die

Did to his breast the fatal point apply,

It found his heart. Dryden.

6. Power; government.

Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies.

He had his will of his man before he could go;

he had the mastery of his parents ever since he could prattle; and why, now he is grown up, must he be restrained? Locke.

7. Divine determination.

I would give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground. The will above be done;

but I would lam die a dry death. Shakespeare.

8. Testament; disposition of a dying man's effects.

Another branch of their revenue still Remains, beyond their boundless right to kill,

Their father yet alive, impow'rd to make a will. Dryden.

Do men make their last wills by word of mouth only? Stephens.

9. Good-will. Favour; kindness.

I'll to the doctor, he hath my good-will,

And none but he to marry with Nan Page. Shakespeare.

10. Good-will. Right intention.

Some preach Christ of envy, and some of good-will. Philippians.

11. Ill-will. Malice; malignity.

Will with a wisp. n. f. Jack with a lantern.

Will with the wisp is of a round figure, in figure like the flame of a candle; but sometimes broader, and like a bundle of twigs set on fire. It sometimes gives a brighter light than that of a wax-candle; at other times more obscure, and of a purple colour. When viewed from a distance, it shines less than at a distance. They wander about in the air, not far from the surface of the earth; and are more frequent in places that are marshy, mouldy, marshy, and abounding with reeds. They haunt burying-places, places of execution, and daughills. They commonly appear in summer and at the beginning of autumn, and are generally at the height of about six feet from the ground. Now they dilute themselves, and now contract; now they go on like waves, and rain as it were sparks of fire, but they burn nothing. They follow those that run away, and fly from those that follow them. Some that have been caught were observed to consist of a thin, viscous, and gelatinous matter, like the spawn of frogs, not hot or burning, but only flaming; to that the matter seems to be phosphorus, prepared and raised from putrified plants, or carcasses by the heat of the sun; which is condensed by the cold of the evening, and then shines. Muschenbroek.

Will-a-wisp meads might facing clowns

O'er hells and sinking bogs. Gow.

To WILL. v. a. [wilgan, Gothick; willan, Saxon; willen, Dutch.]

1. To desire that any thing should be, or be done; or not be, or not be done.

To will, is to bend our souls to the having or doing of that which they too be good. Hooker.

Let Richard be refuted by his blood,

As will the rest, for wildest Winchester. Shakespeare.

I speak not of God's determining his own will, but his predetermining the acts of our will. There is as great difference betwixt these two, as betwixt my willing a lawful thing myself, and my inducing another man to do that which is unlawful. Hammond.

Whoever wills the doing of a thing, it the doing of it be in his power, he will certainly do it; and whoever does not do that thing which he has in his power to do, does not properly will it. South.

A man that fits full is said to be at liberty, because he can walk if he will. Locke.

2. To be inclined or resolved to have.

She's too rough for me;

There, there, Hontebon, will you any wife? Shakespeare.

3. To command; to direct.

St. Paul did wil them of Corinth, every man to lay up some what on the Sunday, and to relieve it in store for the church of Jerusalem, for the relief of the poor there. Hooker.

How rarely does it meet with this time's gate,

When man was will'd to love his enemies? Shakespeare.

Our battle is more full of names than yours,

Our men more perfect in the use of arms,

Our armour's all as strong, our cause the best,

Then reason wills our hearts should be as good. Shakespeare.

He will'd him to be of good comfort, promising to bestow upon him whatsoever he should win. Knollys.

If they had any business, his majesty will'd that they should attend. Clarendon.

'Tis yours, O queen! to will

The work which duty binds me to fulfill. Dryden.

4. It has a loose and slight signification.

Let the circumstances of his be what or where they will, a man should never neglect improvement. Watts.

5. It is one of the signs of the future tense, of which it is difficult to show or limit the signification.

I will come. I am determined to come: importing choice.

Thou wilt come. It must be so that thou must come, importing necessity; or, it shall be that thou shalt come, importing choice.

Will thou come? Hast thou determined to come? importing choice.

He will come. He is resolved to come; or, it must be that he must come: importing either choice or necessity.

It will come. It must so be that it must come: importing necessity.

The plural follows the analogy of the singular.

WILL and WIL, among the English Saxons, as viele at this day among the Germans, signified many. So Willelmus is the defender of many; Wifred, peace to many; which are answered in sense and signification by Polymachus, Polycrates, and Polyphilus. Gibson.

WILLING, adj. [from will.]

1. Inclined to any thing; consenting; not disposed to refuse.

Some other able, and as willing, pays

The rigid satisfaction. Milton.

Can any man trust a better support, under affliction, than the friendship of Omnipotence, who is both able and willing, and knows how to relieve him? Bentley.

2. Pleased; desirous.

He, willing to please one in authority, forced all his skill to make the resemblance of the best fashion. Wisdome.

He sleep'd with weary wings and willing feet. Milton.

3. Favourable; well disposed to any thing.

As many as were willing-hearted brought bracelets and earrings. Exodus.

4. Ready; complying.

Religion hath force to qualify all sorts of men, to make governors the apter to rule with confidence, ministers for conscience sake the willing to obey. Hooker.

We're willing daunces enough. Shakespeare.

5. Chosen.

They're held with his melodious harmony

In willing chains and sweet captivity. Milton.

6. Spontaneous.

Forbear, if thou hast pity;

These groans proceed not from a senseless plant,

No founts of blood run willing from a tree. Dryden.

7. Consenting.

How can hearts not free serve willing?

Milton.

WILLINGLY, adv. [from will.]

1. With one's own consent; without dislike; without reluctance.

That preservation of peace and unity amongst christian churches should be by all good means procured, we join most willingly and gladly with them. Hooker.

I dare not make myself so guilty,

To give up willingly that noble title

Your master wed me to. Shakespeare.

This ransom, if my whole inheritance

May compass it, shall willingly be paid. Milton.

2. By one's own desire.

The condition of that people is not so much to be envied, as some would willingly represent it. Addison.

WILLINGNESS, n. f. [from willing.] Consent; freedom from reluctance; ready compliance.

We praise the things we hear with much more willingness than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past, thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and overlaid by the other. Ben Jonson.

It is not doing good after that same wonderful manner, that Christ's example obligeth us unto, but to a like willingness and readiness to do good, as far as our power reacheth. Calamy.

Fear never yet a generous mind did gain;

We yield on parley, but are storm'd in vain;

Contraint, in all things, makes the pleasure less;

Sweet is the love which comes with willingness. Dryden.

WILLOW, n. f. [salix, Sans. salix, Latin; gwilou, Welsh.] A tree worn by forlorn lovers.

It hath amentaceous flowers, consisting of several stamens, which are collected into a spike, but are barren. The embryos are produced upon different trees from the male flowers, and afterwards become a fruit or husk, shaped like a cone, opening in two parts, and containing downy seeds. Milner.

WIN

I offered him my company to a willow tree, to make him a garland, as being forsaken; to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipt.

Shakspeare.

In such a night
Stood Dido with a willow in her hand
Upon the wild sea banks.

Shakspeare.

Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
I wear the willow garland for his sake.

Shakspeare.

When heaven's burning eye the fields invades,
To marshes he resorts obtruded with reeds,
And hoary willows which the moisture feeds.

Sandys.

Afflicted Israel shall sit weeping down,
Their harps upon the neighbouring willows hung,
No joyous hymn encouraging their tongue.

Penn.

WILLOWISH, adj. [from willow.] Resembling the colour of willow.

Make his body with greenish coloured crewel, or willowish colour.

Watson

WILLOWEED, n. f. [from willow and weed; lysimachia, Latin.] A plant.

Ainsworth.

WILLOWORT, n. f. A plant.

Milner.

WILY, adj. [from wile.] Cunning; sly; full of stratagem; fraudulent; invidious; subtle; mischievously artful.

They are so cautious and wily headed, especially being men of small practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilities and shifts.

Spenser

In the wily snake
Whatever slights, none would suspicious mark,
As from his wit and native subtilty Proceeding.

Milton.

Since this false, wily, doubling disposition of mind is so intolerably mischievous to society, God is sometimes pleased, in mere compassion to men, to give them warning of it, by setting some odd mark upon such Causes.

South.

My wily nurse by long experience found,
And first discover'd to my soul its wound:
'Tis love said she.

Dearden.

WIMBLE, n. f. [winpel, old Dutch, from wemelen, to bore.] An instrument with which holes are bored.

At harvest home, trembling to approach
The little barrel which he fears to brouch,
He flays the wimble, often draws it back,
And deals to thirsty servants but a smack.

Dryden.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble, some huge beam to bore;
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep piercing till it leaps it out.

Pope.

The trepan is like a wimble used by joiners.

Sharp

WIMBLY, adj. Active; nimble; shifting to and fro. Such seems to be the meaning here.

He was so wimble and so wight,
From bough to bough he leaped light,
And oft the pines he latched:

Spenser.

Therewith afraid I ran away;
But he, that erst seem'd but to play,
A thrust in earnest inatched.

Spenser.

WIMPLE, n. f. [pe; lion, Latin.] A hood; a veil. It is printed in Spenser, perhaps by mistake, wimble.

So fair and fresh, as fairest flower in May,
For he had laid her mournful stole aside,
And widow-like in wimble thrown away.

Spenser.

The Lord will take away the changeable suits of apparel, and the wimples, and the wringing pins.

Isaiah.

WIMPLE, v. a. To draw down as a hood or veil.

Under a wimpled head hide
The face and hide
WIN, whether initial or final, in the names of men, may either denote a masculine temper, from pin, which signifies in Saxon, war, strength, &c. or else the general love and esteem he hath among the people, from the Saxon pine, i. e. dear, beloved. In the names of places it implies a battle fought there.

Gibson.

To WIN, v. a. pret. wan and won; part. puif. won. [pinna, Sax. winnen, Dutch.]

1. To gain by conquest.

The town of Gaza, where the enemy lay encamped, was not so strong but it might be won.

Kneller.

He gave him a command in his navy, and under his good conduct won many islands.

Heylin.

His whole descent, who thus shall Canaan win.

Milton.

Follow cheerful to the trembling town;
Pret's but an entrance, and pretence it won.

Dryden.

2. To gain the victory in a contest.

Loyalty is still the fame,
Whether it win or lose the game;
True as the dial to the sun,
Altho' it be not shin'd upon.

Hudibras.

I live years at Trentum won
The quiet ship, and then our love began.

Dehnam.

Thy well-breath'd hoile
Impels the flying car, and wins the course.

Dryden.

3. To gain something withheld, or something valuable.

When you see my son, tell him, that his sword can never win the honour that he loses.

Shakspeare.

Resolved to win, he meditates the way
By force to ravish, or by fraud betray.

Pope.

4. To obtain; to allure to kindness or compliance.

Thy virtue won me; with virtue preserve me.
Dost thou love me? Keep me then still worthy to be beloved.

Sidney.

Deviish Macbeth
By many of these trains hath sought to win me.

Shakspeare.

5. To gain by play.

He had given a disagreeable vote in parliament, for which reason not a man would have to much correspondence with him as to win his money.

Addison.

6. To gain by persuasion.

They win great numbers to receive
With joy the tidings brought from heav'n.

Milton.

7. To gain by courtship.

She's beautiful, and therefore to be won'd;
She is a woman, therefore to be won.

Shakspeare.

No tears, Celia, now shall win
My resolv'd heart to return;

Carw.

I have search'd thy soul within,
And find nought but pride and scorn.

Carw.

That flood witness'd his inconstant flame,
When thus he swore, and won the yielding dame.

Gay.

To WIN, v. n.

1. To gain the victory.

That he, who in debate of truth hath won,
Should win in arms.

Milton.

2. To gain influence or favour.

You express yourself very desirous to win upon the judgment of your master, and not upon his affections only.

Bacon.

You have a softness and sweetness winning on the hearts of others.

Dryden.

Thy words like music every breast controul,
Swail thro' the air, and win upon the soul.

Pope.

3. To gain ground.

The rabble will in time win upon power.

Shakspeare.

4. To be conqueror or gainer at play.

Charles, I will play no more to-night:
My mind's not on't, you are too hard for me.

Shakspeare.

—Sir, I did never win of you before.

Shakspeare.

—But little, Charles;

Shakspeare.

Not shall not, when my fancy's on my play.

Shakspeare.

To WINCE, v. n. [gwingo, Welsh.] To kick, as impatient of pain.

I will sit as quiet as a lamb,
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word.

Shakspeare.

Room, room, for my horse will wince,
If he came within so many yards of a prince.

Ben Jonson.

The angry beast did straight resent
The wrong done to his fundament,
Began to kick, and sting, and wince,
As it had been beside his sense.

Hudibras.

WINCE, n. f. [from wince.] A kicking brast.

WINCH, n. f. [guincher, Fr. to twist.] A windlass; something held in the hand by which a wheel or cylinder is turned.

Put a winch with the wheel.

Mortimer.

To WINCH, v. a. [The same with wince; or perhaps from guincher, French, to twist; winch signifying sometimes to writhe or contort the body.] To kick with impatience; to shrink from any uneasiness.

We who have free souls
It touches not, let the gall'd jade wince;
Our withers are unwringing.

Shakspeare.

Have these bones rattled, and this head
So often in the quarrel bled!

Hudibras.

Nor did I ever wince, or grudge it.

Hudibras.

This installation gall'd the panther more;
Yet seem'd the not to wince, though thrav'dly pun'd.

Dryden.

Their confidences are gul'd; and this makes them wince and sting, as if they had some mettle.

Tillotson.

WINSCOPE, n. f.

There is a small red flower in the stubble-fields, which country people call the winscope; which if it opens in the morning, you may be sure a rainy day will follow.

Bacon.

WIND, n. f. [pinb, Saxon; wind, Dutch; gwynt, Welsh.]

1. Wind is when any tract of air moves from the place it is in, to any other, with an impetus that is sensible to us: wherefore it was not ill called by the ancients a swifter course of air; a flowing wave of air; a flux, effusion, or stream of air.

Muschenbruck.

The worthy fellow is our general. He's the rock, the oak, not to be wind shaken.

Shakspeare.

Love's heralds should be thoughts
Which ten times faster glide than the sun beams,
Driving back shadows over lowering hills,
Therefore do wimble-pinion'd doves draw love;
And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings.

Shakspeare.

Falmouth lieth farther on in the trade way, and so offeth a sooner opportunity to wind-driven ships than Plymouth.

Carw.

Wind is nothing but a violent motion of the air, produced by its rarefaction more in one place than another, by the sun-beams, the attractions of the moon, and the combinations of the earth's motions.

Chryse.

2. Direction of the blast from a particular point; as eastward, westward.

I'll give thee a wind,
I myself have all the other,
And the very points they blow;
All the quarters that they know
I'th' shipman's card.

Shakspeare.

In the year 1500, one Flavio of Malphi, in the realm of Naples, tow'd out the compass, or pin's nautica, consisting of eight winds only, the four principal, and four collateral; and not long after, the people of Bruges and Antwerp perfected that excellent invention, adding twenty-four other subordinate winds.

Heglin.

3. Breath; power or act of respiration.

If my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repeat.

Shakspeare.

He took the cup as at his observed the rule of drinking with one breath. Hobart.

The perfume of the flowers, and their virtues to sure shortness of wind in purify old men, seems to agree most with the orange. Temple

It shipp'd at once the passage of his wind,
And the first soul to sitting air resign'd. Dryden.

4. Air caused by any action.
On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids, With divers colour'd faws, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shakespeare

In an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a raw of pipes the sound-board breathes. Milton.

5. Breath modulated by an instrument.
Where the air is pent, there breath or other blowing, which carries but a gentle percussion, suffices to create sound; as in pipes and wind instruments. Bacon.

Their instruments were various in their kind;
Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind. Dryden.

6. Air impregnated with scent.
A hare had long escap'd pursuing hounds,
By often flitting into distant grounds,
Till finding all his artifices vain,
To save his life, he leapt into the main,
But there, alas! he could no safety find,
A pack of dog fish had him in the wind. Swift.

7. Flatulence; windiness.
It turns
Wisdom to folly, as nourishment to wind. Milton.

8. Any thing insignificant or light as wind.
Think not with wind of airy threats to awe. Milt.

9. Down the Wind. To decay.
A man that had a great veneration for an image in his house, found that the more he prayed to it to protect him in the world, the more he went down the wind still. L'Estrange.

10. To take or have the Wind. To gain or have the upper hand.
Let a king's council beware how he opens his own inclinations too much; for else counsellors will but take the wind of him, instead of giving free counsel. Bacon.

To Wind. v. a. pret. wound, in Pope winded; part. wound, [pindean, Saxon;
winden, Dutch; from the noun.]

1. To blow; to found by inflation.
The figure ran nigher to approach,
And wind his horn under the castle wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall. Spenser.
Every Triton's horn is winding,
Welcome to the wat'ry plain. Dryden.
Ye vigorous swains! while youth ferments your blood,
Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net. Pope.

2. To turn round; to twist.
Nero could touch and tune the harp well; but in government sometimes he used to wind the pins too high, and sometimes let them down too low. Bacon.

The figure of a sturdy woman, done by Michael Angelo, washing and winding off linen cloaths; in which act she wrings out the water that made the loutskin. Watson.

Wind the wood-bine round this arbour. Milton.

3. To regulate in motion; to turn to this or that direction.
He vaulted with such ease into his seat,
As if an angel dropt down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus,
And witch the world with noble horsemanship. Shakespeare.

In a common wealth or realm,
The government is call'd the helm;
With which, like vessel's steering sail,
They're turn'd and steered as they shall. Hudibras.

4. To nose; to follow by the nose.

5. To turn by the nose of the wind.
Whence coming of religion's winds
The meads in faith and wind a trade. Hudibras.
Voss II.

Mr. Whiston did not care to give more than short, general hints of this famous challenge, and the issue of it; but he endeavours to wind and turn himself every way to evade its force. Waterland.

6. To introduce by insinuation.
You have contriv'd to take
From Rome all sensu'd offices, and to wind Yourself into a power tyrannical. Shakespeare.

Edmund, seek him out, and send me into him, frame
the business after your own wisdom. Shakespeare.

7. To change.
Were our legislature vested in the prince, he might wind and turn our constitution at his pleasure, and shape our government to his fancy. Addison.

8. To entwine; to enfold; to encircle.
Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms. Shakespeare.

You know me well, and herein spend but time
To wind about my love with circumstance. Shakespeare.

Sometimes am I
All wound with adders, who with cloven tongues
Do hiss me into madness. Shakespeare.

9. To Wind out. To extricate.
When he found himself dangerously embarked,
he bethought himself of all possible ways to disentangle himself, and to wind himself out of the labyrinth he was in. Clarendon.

10. To Wind up. To bring to a small compass, as a bottom of thread.
Without solemnly winding up one argument, and intimating that he began another, he lets his thoughts, which were fully possessed of the matter, run in one continued strain. Locke.

11. To Wind up. [used of a watch.] To convolve the spring.
I shewn the while, and perchance wind up my watch, or play with some rich jewel. Shakespeare.

12. To Wind up. To put into a state of renovated or continued motion.
Fate seem'd to wind him up for fourscore years,
Yet freshly run he on ten winters more;
Till, like a clock worn out with calling time,
The wheels of weary life at last stood still. Dryden.

Will not the author of the universe, having made an automaton which can wind up itself, see whether it hath stood still or gone true? Grew.

Is there a tongue, like Dehn's o'er her cup,
That runs for ages without winding up? Young.

13. To Wind up. To raise by degrees.
These he did so wind up to his purpose, that they withdrew from the court. Hayward.

When they could not coolly convince him, they railed, and called him an heretic: thus they wound up his temper to a pitch, and teacherously made use of that infirmity. Atterbury.

14. To Wind up. To tighten a string by turning that on which it is rolled; to put in tune.
Hylas! why fit we nutes,
Now that each bird salutes the spring.
Wind up the slacken'd strings of thy lute,
Never canst thou want matter to sing. Waller.

Your lute may wind its strings but little higher,
To tune their notes to that immortal quire. Prior.

15. To Wind up. To put in order for regular action: from a watch.
O you kind gods!
Cure this great breach of his abused nature;
Th' untun'd strings of sense O wind up
Of this child's wild nature. Shakespeare.

The weary waves, hand in hand,
Potters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again to make up nine;
Peace! the charm's wound up. Shakespeare.

To Wind. v. n.

1. To turn; to change.
So swift your judgments turn and wind,
You cast your fleetest wits a mile behind. Dryden.

2. To turn; to be convolved.
Some plants can support themselves; and some others creep along the ground, or wind about other trees, and cannot support themselves. Bacon.

Stairs of a solid novel spread only upon one small novel, as the several folds of a fan spread about their centre; but these, because they sometimes wind, and sometimes fly off from that winding, take more room up in the staircase. Mason.

3. To move round.
If aught obstruct thy course, yet stand not still,
But wind about till thou hast topp'd the hill. Dromio.

4. To proceed in flexures.
It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
As rob me of so rich a bottom here. Shakespeare.

Ever more did winds
About his bosom a most crafty winds. Chapman.

He winds with ease
Through the pure marble air his oblique way,
Amongst innumerable stars. Milton.

It was a rock winding with one ascent. Milton.

The silver Thames, her own downy flood,
Shall bear her vessels, like a sweeping train;
And often wind, as of his mistress proud,
With longing eyes to meet her face again. Dryden.

You that can search those many corner'd minds,
Where woman's crooked saucy turns and winds. Dryden.

Sull fix thy eyes intent upon the throng,
And, as the paces open, wind along. Gay.

5. Wound is commonly the proterit. Pope has used winded.
Swift ascending from the azure wave,
He took the path that wind'd to the cave. Pope.

6. To be extricated; to be disentangled; with out.
Long labouring underneath, ere they could wind
Out of such prison. Milton.

WINDBOUND, adj. [wind and bound.]
Confined by contrary winds.
Yet not for this the wind-bound navy weigh'd;
Slack were their sails, and Neptune disobey'd. Dryden.

When I bestir myself, it is high sea in his house;
and when I sit still, his affairs forsooth are a wind-bound. Spectator.

Is it reasonable that our English fleet, which used to be the terror of the ocean, should be wind-bound? Spectator.

WINDING, n. f. An egg not impregnated; an egg that does not contain the principles of life.

Sound eggs sink, and such as are addled swim;
as do also those termed hypenemata, or windings. Brown.

WINDING, n. f. [from wind.]

1. An instrument or person by which any thing is turned round.
The winder shows his workmanship so rare
As doth the fleece excel, and mocks her looser clew;
As neatly bottom'd up as nature forth it drew. Drayton.

To keep troublesome servants out of the kitchen, leave the winder sticking on the jack, to fall on their heads. Swift.

2. A plant that twists itself round others.
Plants that put forth their sap tardily, have their bodies not proportionable to their length; and therefore they are winders and creepers, as ivy and bryony. Bacon.

WINDFALL, n. f. [wind and fall.]

1. Fruit blown down from the tree.
Gather now, if ripe, your winter fruits, as apples, to prevent their falling by the great winds;
also gather your windfalls. Evelyn.

2. An unexpected legacy.

WINDFLOWER, n. f. The anemone.

WINDGALL, n. f. [wind and gall.]
Windgalls are soft, yielding, fluctuant tumours or bladders, full of corrupt jelly, which grow on each side of the fetlock joint, and are the pain-fullest of the horse's limbs, especially in hot weather and hard riding, and they may be made to heal by salt. They are sometimes cured by draining, or by a horse's standing on his hind legs, or from extreme labour and heat. Far. Dict.

His horse infected with the infection, full of windgalls, and sped with spavine. Shakespeare.

WINDGUN, n. f. [wind and gun.] Gun
6 L

which discharges the bullet by means of wind compressed.

The windgun is charged by the forcible compression of air, being injected through a tyming, the slide and diffusion of the impulsive air serving, by the help of little bells or flutes within, to stop and keep close the vents by which it was admitted.

For'd from windguns, lead and life in fly,
And pound'rous flugs cut swiftly through the sky.

Pope.

WINDINESS. n. f. [from windy.]

1. Fulness of wind; flatulence.

A windiness and puffing up of your stomach after dinner, and in the morning.

Harvey.

Onicks are prepared for the letting forth of the rusted spirits in rusts, or windiness, the common effects of all fermented liquors.

Flager.

2. Tendency to generate wind.

Scarcely forthwith of its windiness by decocting, and, generally, subtle or windy parts are taken off by incision or evaporation.

Paeon.

3. Tumour; puffiness.

From this his modest and humble charity, virtues which rarely cohabit with the swelling windiness of much knowledge, issued this.

Threacood.

WINDING. n. f. [from wind.] Flexure; meander.

It was the pleasantest voyage in the world to follow the windings of this river Inn, through such a variety of pleasing scenes as the course of it naturally led us.

Addison.

The ways of heaven are dark and intricate;
Our minds climbing traces them in vain,
Nor fees with loss much at the windings run,
Nor where the regular confusion ends.

Addison.

WINDING-SHEET. n. f. [wind and sheet.] A sheet in which the dead are enwrapped.

The arms of mine shall be thy winding sheet;
My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy feather;
For from my heart thine image ne'er shall go.

Shakespeare.

The great winding sheets, that bury all things in oblivion, are deluges and earthquakes.

Bacon.

The chaste Penelope having, as she thought, left Ulysses at sea, employed her time in preparing a winding sheet for Laertes, the father of her husband.

Spectator.

WINDLASS. n. f. [wind and lace.]

1. A handle by which a rope or lace is wrapped together round a cylinder.

2. A handle by which any thing is turned.

Thus do we of wisdom and of truth,
With windlasses, and with assays of bias,
By inductions find directions out.

Shakespeare.

WINDLE. n. f. [from To wind.] A spindle.

Amfworth.

WINDMILL. n. f. [wind and mill.] A mill turned by the wind.

We, like Don Quixote, do advance Against a windmill our vain force.

Waller.

Such a sailing chariot might be more conveniently framed with moveable sails, whose force may be impelled from their motion, equivalent to those in a windmill.

Wilkins.

Windmills grind twice the quantity in an hour that watermills do.

Mortimer.

His fancy has made a giant of a windmill, and he's now engaging it.

F. Atterburn.

WINDOW. n. f. [windue, Danish. Skinner thinks it originally wind-door.]

1. An aperture in a building by which air and light are intermitted.

Being one day at my window all alone,
Many strange things happened me to see.

Spenser.

A fair view her windoe yields,
The town, the river, and the fields.

Waller.

He through a little window cast his sight,
Though thick of bars that have a feinty light;
But ev'n that chamber serv'd him to delect
Th' inevitable charms of Emily.

Dryden.

When you leave the windows open for air, leave books on the window-seat, that they may get air too.

Seyt.

2. The frame of glass or any other materials that cover the aperture.

To thee I do commend my watchful soul,
Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes:

Sleeping or waking, oh defend me still!

Shaksp.

In the ten's light, let into my darkened chamber through a small round hole in my window shutter, at about ten or twelve feet from the window, I placed a lens.

Newton.

3. Lanes crossing each other.

The windute, that just begins to prattle,
Is very homophonous, and makes great clatter,
Till he has winduous on his bread and butter.

King.

4. An aperture resembling a window.

To W's cow, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To furnish with windows.

Between pale hall columns above, the whole room was windued round.

Hutton.

With port that eyes the windue'd well its head;
A brain of leather, and a heart of lead.

Pope.

2. To place at a window.

Wouldst thou be windue'd in great Rome, and live

Thy master thus with pleacht arms, bending down

His cornible neck, his face subdued

To penetrative flame?

Shakspere.

3. To break into openings.

Poor waked wretches, wheretoe'er you are,
That hide the peeling of this pitiless storm,
How shall your housele be heads, and unted sides,
Your loop'd and windue'd raggedness, defend you

From fections such as these?

Shakspere.

WINDPIPE. n. f. [wind and pipe.] The passage for the breath; the appra arteria.

Let gillows gaze for dogs, let man go free,
And let not hemp his windpipe fulminate.

Shaksp.

The windpipe, rough artery, or windpipe, is a part inferient to voice and inspiration; thereby the air descendeth into the lungs, and is communicated into the heart.

Brown.

The quacks of government, who fat
At th' unregarded helm of state,
Consider'd timely how t' withdraw,

And save them windpipes from the law.

Hudibras.

Beane (cont) and respiration is necessary for the support of our lives, the windpipe is made with annular cartilages.

Ray.

The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches, called bronchiae: these end in small air bladders, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it.

Arbuthnot.

WINDWARD. adv. [from wind.] Toward the wind.

WINDY. adj. [from wind.]
1. Consisting of wind.

See what flowery arise,
Blown with the windy tempest of my soul

Upon thy wounds, that kill mine eyes and heart.

Shakspere.

Subtle or windy spirits are taken off by incision or evaporation.

Bacon.

2. Next the wind.

Lady, you have a merry heart.—

—Yes, my lord, I thank it, poor fool!

It keeps on the windy side of care.

Shakspere.

3. Empty; airy.

Why should calumny be full of words?

Windy attunes to their client woes.

Poor breathing outlets of mine eyes.

Shakspere.

What wind in joy this day and evening's?

Hopeful of his drive cy, which now drives

Above, as the fast-born bloom of spring

Nipt with the lagging rear of winter's frost!

Milton.

Look, here 's that windy applause, that poor transitory pleasure, for which I was dishonoured.

South.

Of ev'ry nation each illustrious name
Such toys these have elevated into fame,
Exchanging loud quiet to obtain
The windy intrusion of the brain.

Dryden.

4. Tempestuous; molested with wind.

On this windy sea of land the fiend

Walk'd up and down.

Milton.

It is not bare agitation, but the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water; and when we see it windy and dusty, the wind does not make but only raise dust.

South.

5. Puffy; flatulent.

In such a windy colic, water is the best remedy after a surfeit of fruit.

Arbuthnot.

WINE. n. f. [pin, Saxon; vin, Dutch.]

1. The fermented juice of the grape.

The wine of life is drawn, and the meier lees

Is left this vault to brag of.

Shakspere.

Do not fall in love with me;

For I am taller than vows made in wine.

Shaksp.

The increase of the vineyards for the wine cellars

Chambers.

Be not amongst wine-bibbers, amongst riotous eaters.

Proverbs.

Thy garments like him that treadeth in the vine fat.

Isaiah.

They took old sacks upon their asses, and wine-bottles old and rent, and bound up.

Job.

Where the wine-press is hard-wrought, it yields a harsh wine that takes of the grape-stone.

Bacon.

His troops on my strong youth like torrents rush;

As in a wine-press Jotham's daughter crush'd.

Shaksp.

With large wine offerings pour'd, and sacred feast.

Milton.

Shall I, to please another wine-sprung mind,

Loose all mine own? God hath giv'n me a measure

Short of his came and body: must I find

A pain in that, wherein he finds a pleasure?

Isaiah.

The firstlings of the flock are doom'd to die;

No fragrant wines the cheering bowl supply.

Pope.

If the highroad falls short, the wine-cooper had not fill'd it in proper time.

Saunders.

2. Preparations of vegetables by fermentation, called by the general name of wines, have quite different qualities from the plant; for no fruit, taken crude, has the intoxicating quality of wine.

Arbuth.

WING. n. f. [gehpung, Saxon; unge, Danish.]

1. The limb of a bird by which it flies.

As Venus' bird, the white swift lovely dove,

Doth on her wings her utmost swiftness prove,

Finishing the gaze of talent here not far.

Sidney.

Ignorance is the cante of God,

Knowledg the wing wherewith we fly to heaven.

Shakspere.

An eagle stirr'd up her nest, spreadth abroad

her wings, taketh them and beareth them on her wings.

Deuteronomy.

A pleasant wind to stretch

Her wings to wait us, and to urge'd our keel.

Chap.

The pounce of augurs, Heisterles, rail;

Present he view'd th' aerial tracts, and drew

A sure preface from ev'ry wing that flew.

Pope.

2. A fan to window.

It is, cartave, and bushel, peck, ready at hand.

Taylor.

3. Flight; passage by the wing.

Light flocks, and the crow

Makes wing to th' rooky wood.

Good things of day begin to droop and drowse,

While night's black agents to their prey do rouse.

Shakspere.

Thy affections hold a wing

Quite from the sight of all thy successors.

Shaksp.

I have pursued her as love hath pursued no, on the wing of all occasions.

Shakspere.

While passion is upon the wings, and the man fully engaged in the prosecution of some dastard object, no remedy or controul is to be expected from his reason.

South.

You are too young your power to understand,

Lovers take wing upon the keel command.

Dryden.

And fir, light, with inborn vigour, on the wing,

Like mounting larks, to the new morning sing.

Dryden.

Then life is on the wing; then most the larks

When most the seems reviv'd.

South.

4. The motive or incitement of flight.

Fearful wing

Is leaden servitude, and dull delay;

Delay leads hapless and that-pac'd beggary;

Then fiery expedition be my wing;

Jore's Mercury, and herald for a king.

Shakspere.

WINGED BODIES of an army.

The footmen were Germans, to whom were joined as wings certain companies of Italians. Kneller

The left wing put to flight,

The chief's o'erborn, he rushes on the right. Dryden
6. Any side-piece.

The plough proper for stiff clays is long, large, and broad, with a deep head and a square earthen-board, the coulter long and very little bending, with a very large wing. Motimer

To WING, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with wings; to enable to fly.
The speed of gods

Time counts not, though with swiftest minutes wing'd. Milton

Who knows but he, whose hand the lightning forms,

Who heaves old ocean, and who wings the storms,
Pours fierce ambition in a mortal mind,
Or turns young Ammon back to scourge mankind? Pope

2. To supply with side bodies.

We outflank will follow
In the main battle, which on either side
Shall be well winged with our chosen horse. Shakespeare

To WING, v. n.

1. To transport by flight.

I, an old tutor,
Will wing me to some wilder'd bough, and there
My mate, that's never to be found again,
I meant till I am lost. Shakespeare

2. To exert the power of flying.

Worn'd with more patches of heavenly flame,
He wing'd his upward flight, and fear'd to fall;
The rest remain'd below, a crowd without a name. Dryden

Struck with the horror of the fight,
She turns her head, and wings her flight. Prior
From the Meons to the northern sea,
The goddess wings her desperate way. Prior

WINGED, adj. [from wing.]

1. Furnished with wings; flying.
And shall grace not find means, that finds her way

The swiftest of thy winged messengers,
To visit all thy creatures? Milton

We can tear no force
But winged troops on Protestant horse. Waller

The winged lion's not to force in flight,
As Libya's hand pretends him to our sight. Waller

The cockney is impudant in many actions of the quadruped and winged animals in the fields. Watts

2. Swift; rapid.

Now we bear the king
Tow'rd Calais, grant him there, and there being seen,

Heave him away upon your winged thoughts
Aloft the seas. Shakespeare

Hie, good Sir W's back, bear this foaled brief
With winged haste to the lord in chief. Shakespeare

WINGY, adj. [from wing.] Having wings; resembling wings.

They spring together out, and swiftly bear
The flying youth through clouds and yielding air;
With wingy speed outstrip the eastern wind,
And leave the breezes of the moon behind. Addis

To WINK, v. n. [pinctan, Sax. wincken, Dutch.]

1. To shut the eye.

Let's see thine eyes, now open them:
In me of men yet thou art not well. Shakespeare

They're fustier, that speak to them shall die:
I wink and catch; no man their sports must eye. Shakespeare

His false cunning

Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance,
And grew a twenty years removed thing,
While one would wink. Shakespeare

He, with great imagination,
Proper to madmen, led his power to death,
And, winking, leap'd into destruction. Shakespeare

In despite of all this, he runs foolishly into his sin and ruin, merely because he winks hard, and rushes violently like a horse into the battle. Taylor

The Scripture represents wicked men as without understanding: not that they are destitute of the natural faculty, they are not blind, but they wink. Tillotson

If any about them should make them think there is any difference between being in the dark and winking, get it out of their minds. Locke

2. To hint, or direct, by the motion of the eyelids.

You saw my master wink and laugh upon you. Shakespeare

Send him a spoon when he wants a knife: wink at the footman to leave him without a plate. Swift

3. To close, and exclude the light.

While flames play'd and smog, and told his tale,
The keeper's winking eyes began to fail,
And drowsy slumber on his lids to creep,
Till all the watchman was not length asleep. Dryden

When you shoot, and shut one eye,
You cannot think he would deny

To lend the t'other friendly aid,
Or wink, as coward and afraid. Prior

4. To connive; to seem not to see; to tolerate.

They be better content with one that will wink at their faults, than with him that will improve them. Whigft

I, for winking at your disorders too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakespeare

Let not night see my black and deep desires;
The eye winks at the hand! Shakespeare

The king gave him great gifts, and winked at the great spoil of Bosworth-field, which came almost wholly to this man's hands. Bacon

Let us not write at a loose resembling rate,
To hope the world will wink at all our faults. Botemmon

Obstinacy cannot be winked at, but must be subdued. Locke

Cato is firm, and awful as a god:
He knows not how to wink at human frailty,
Or pardon weakness that he never lost. Ad'ison

5. To be dim.

The fallen tyrant slept not all the night,
But, bare's walking by a winking light,
Sob'd, wip'd, and groan'd, and beat his waker'd breast. Dryden

WINK, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Act of closing the eye.

You doing thus,
To the perpetual wink for ay might put
This ancient moral. Shakespeare

At every wink of an eye some new grace will be born

Since I needn't command to do this business,
I have not slept one wink. Shakespeare

The fawns to revel and frolic,
Do thou not think

I could erpise and cloud them with a wink,
But that I would not lose her sight so long? Donne

It rag'd in thought, that I could not sleep a wink. Temple

No, but then I think;
And for my foot I cannot sleep a wink. Pope

2. A hint given by motion of the eye.

Her wink each bold attempt forbids. Sidney

The stockjobber thus from 'Change-alley goes down,

And tips you the freeman a wink;
Let me have bet your vote to serve for the town,
And here is a guinea to drink. Swift

WINKER, n. f. [from wink.] One who winks.

A set of nodders, winkers, and whisperers, whose business is to strangle all others offspring of wit in their birth. Pope

WINKINGLY, adv. [from winking.] With the eye almost closed.

If one beholdeth the light, he vieweth it winkingly, as those do that are palsied; but if any thing that is black, he looketh upon it with a broad and full eye. Peachment

WINNER, n. f. [from win.] One who wins.

A gamester, having lost all, borroweth of his next fellow gamester some hat to maintain play; which he setting unto him again, shortly winneth all from the winner. Spenser

Go together,
You precious winners all, your exultation
Postake to every one. Shakespeare

Bethrew the winners, for they play'd too false. Shakespeare

Whether the winner laughs or no, the loser will complain; and rather than quarrel with his own skill, will do it at the dice. Temple

WINNING, participial adj. [from win.]

Attractive; charming.

Yet less fair,
I fear a winning face, less amably mild,
Than that smooth watery image. Milton

On her, as queen,
A pomp of winning graces waited full;
And from about her that darts of desire
Into all eyes, to wither her full in fight. Milton

Shines out in every thing she acts or speaks,
While winning mildness and attractive smiles
Dwell in her looks, and with becoming grace
Soft'n the rigour of her father's virtues. Addison

WINNING, n. f. [from win.] The sum won.

A simile in one of Congreve's prologues compares a writer to a buttering gamester, that takes all his winnings upon every call; so that if he loses the bet throw, he is sure to be undone. Addison

To WINNOW, v. a. [pinthian, Saxon; cranno, Latin.]

1. To separate by means of the wind; to part the grain from the chaff.

Wee our royal faith mingles in love,
We shall be wassail'd with to rough a wind,
That even our corn shall be as high as chaff. Shakespeare

And good from bad find no partition. Shakespeare

In the sun your golden grain display,
And thrash it out and winnow it by day. Dryden

2. To fan; to beat as with wings.

Now on the polar winds, then with quick fan
It moves the buxom air. Milton

3. To sift; to examine.

Winnow well thy thought, and you shall find
'Tis light as chaff that flies before the wind. Dryden

4. To separate; to part.

Put her to the trial
Winnow the truth from falsehood. Shakespeare

To WINNOW, v. n. To part corn from chaff.

It came not with every wind, and go not into every way. Isidore

WINTER, n. f. [pincep, Saxon; winter, Danish, German, and Dutch.] The cold season of the year.

Though he were already kept into the winter of his age, he found himself warm to that degree which were in his last far more excusable. Samuel

After summer evermore succeeds
The barren winter with his nipping cold. Shakespeare

A woman's story at a winter's fire. Shakespeare

He hath bought a pair of cast lips of Diana's
Mum of winter's silverhood kisses not more richly;
The very eye of chastity is in them. Shakespeare

The two beneath the distant poles comply
Of endless winter and perpetual rain. Lyden

Let thou sleep beneath that hill of snow?
Stretch out thy lazy limbs; awake, awake,
And winter from thy thrice mantle shake. Lyden

Suppose our poet was your foe before,
Yet now the business of the field is o'er:
'Tis time to let your civil wars alone,
When troops are into winter quarters gone.

Dryden
He that makes no reflections on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit in winter-nights for the entertainment of others.

Locke
Stern winter smiles on that auspicious clime,
The fields are florid with un fading prime. Pope
To define winter, I consider first wherein it agrees with summer, spring, autumn, and I find they are all seasons of the year; therefore a season of the year is a genus: then I observe wherein it differs from these, and that is in the shortness of the days; therefore this may be called its special nature, or difference: then, by joining them together, I make a definition. Winter is that season of the year, wherein the days are shortest. Watts.

To WINTER, v. n. [from the noun.] To pass the winter.
The fowls shall summer upon them, and all the beasts of the earth shall winter upon them.

Spenser

But keep that countenance still. Shakspeare

WINTERY, adj. [from winter.] Brumal;
hyemal; suitable to winter.

He saw the Trojan feet dispers'd, dispers'd,
By stormy winds and wintry heav'n oppress'd. Dryden

WINTY, adj. [from wine.] Having the taste of quantities of wine.

Set an end among milk-melons, and see whether the melons will not be more winty, and better tasted. Bacon

WIPE, v. a. [wipen, Saxon.]

To cleanse by rubbing with something soft.

Such a handkercher,
I'm sure it was your wife's, did I to-day
See Cassio wipe his beard with. Shakspeare
She a gentle tear let fall
From either eye, and wip'd them with her hair.

Then with her vest the woged she wip'd and dried. DeWan

2. To take away by friction.

Calumniate stoutly; for though we wipe away with never so much care the dirt thrown at us, there will be left some sullage behind.

Decay of Piety.

3. To strike off gently.

Let me wipe off this honourable dew,
That silverd doth progress on thy cheeks.

Shakspeare

Some natural tears they dropp'd, but wip'd them
soon. Milton

A young man, having suffered many tortures, escaped with life, and told his fellow christians,
that the pain of them had been rendered tolerable by the presence of an angel, who stood by him and wiped off the tears and sweat. Addison

4. To clear away.

Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples; reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Shakspeare

5. [emungo.] To cheat; to defraud.

The next bordering lords commonly encroach one upon another, no one is stronger, or he full in want to wipe them out of their hands. Spenser

6. To WIPE out. To efface.

This blot, that they object against your house,
Shall be wip'd out in the next parliament.

Shakspeare

As thou lov'st me, Camillo, wipe not out the rest of thy services by leaving me now. Shakspeare

Take one in whom deep old age has blotted out the memory of his past knowledge, and clearly wiped out the ideas his mind was formerly stored with, and topped up all the passages for new ones, to enter; or it there be some of the inlets yet left open, the impressions made are thence perceived. Locke

WIPE, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Act of cleansing.

2. A blow; a stroke; a jeer; a gibe; a sarcasm.

To flatterer would you give a wipe,
You print it in Italian type:
When letters are in vulgar shapes,
'Tis ten to one the wit escapes;
But when in capitals express'd,
The duldest reader smokes the jest. Swift

3. [ancillus.] A bird. Ainsworth

WIPE, n. f. [from wipe.] An instrument or person by which any thing is wiped.

The maids and their makes,

And the wipes for their noses. Ben Jonson

WIPE, n. f. [wiper, French, to draw round.]

WIPE, n. f. Metal drawn into slender threads.

'Twas the damsel, and without remorse
The king condemn'd her, gaily, to the fire;
Her veil and mantle pluck'd they off by force,
And bound her tender arms in twisted wire. Fairfax

Thou shalt be whipt with wire, and strew'd in thyme.

Smothering in ling'ring pickle. Shakspeare

The soldier, that man of non,
Whom ribs of horror all environ,
That's strong with wire instead of veins,
In whose embraces you're in the clutches. Fletcher

And the cherub host, in thousand quires,
Toush their immortal harps of golden wires. Milt.
Some roll a mighty stone, four laid along,
And bound with burning wires, on spokes of wheels are hung. Dryden

To WIREDRAW, v. a. [wire and draw.]

1. To spin into wire.

2. To draw out into length.

A fluid moving through a flexible canal, when wire draw the sides of the canal, according to the direction of its axis. Arbuthnot

3. To draw by art or violence.

I have been wrongfully accused, and my sense wire drawn into blasphemy. Dryden

WIREDRAW, n. f. [wire and draw.]
One who spins wire.

Those who have need of unmixed silver, as goldsmiths and wire drawers, must, besides an equal weight of silver mixed with other metals, give an overplus to reward the refiner's skill. Locke

To WISE, v. a. pret. and part. pass. wif.
[wifin. German; wyfen, Dutch.] To think; to imagine. Obsolete.

Thus proud and fierce, unto the hearts he kept
Of them poor souls; and cutting reason's reins,
Made them his own before they had it wif.

Sidney

When Mammon saw his purpose mist,
Him to entrap unware, another way he wif.

Spenser

This book, advisedly read, and diligently followed but one year at home, would do a young gentleman more good, I wif, than three years travel abroad. Aylmer

There be fools alive, I wif,
Silver'd o'er, and so was this. Shakspeare

Marry with a king;

A bachelor, a handsome tripling too,

I wif your grandson had a wiser match. Shakspeare

When for more worlds the Macedonian cried,
He wif not Thetys in her lap did hide
Another yet, a world reserv'd for you,

WISDOM, n. f. [pydom, Saxon; wifdom,
Danish.]

1. Sequence; the power of judging rightly; the knowledge of divine and human things.

That which moveth God to work is goodness, and that which ordereth his work is wisdom, and that which perfecteth his work is power. Hooker

As from senses reason's work doth spring,
So many reasons understanding gain,
And many understandings knowledge bring,
And by much knowledge wisdom we obtain. Dantes

Wisdom is that which makes men judge what are the best ends, and what the best means to attain them, and gives a man advantage of counsel and direction. Temple

As science is properly that knowledge which relat-eth to the essences of things, so wisdom to their operations. Gruw

O sacred solitude! divine retreat!
Choice of the prudent, envy of the great!
By thy pure stream, or in the waving shade,
We court fair wisdom, that celestial maid. Young

2. Prudence; skill in affairs; judicious conduct.

'Tis much he dares,
And to that damsel's temper of his mind,
He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour
To act in safety. Shakspeare

Wisdom and fortune combating together,
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may shake it. Shakspeare

WIS, adj. [wif, Saxon; wif, Dutch and Danish.]

1. Sapient; judging rightly; having much knowledge.

Heav'n is for thee too high; be lowly wif.

Milton

All the writings of the ancient Goths were cou-pied in verse, which were called runes, or verses, and from thence the term of wif came. Temple

Since the floods demand
For their descent a prone and sinking land,
Does not this due declivity declare
A wif director's providential care? Blackmore

The wif and best men, in all ages, have lived up to the religion of their country, when they saw nothing in it opposite to morality. Addison

2. Judicious; wisely; practically knowing.

These were ten virgins; five of them were wif, and five were foolish. Matthew

I would have you wif unto that which is good,
and simple concerning evil. Romans

At a declining, Alma flies
At a declining, the mighty and the wife?
By nature more an eagle than a dove,
She impiously preys the world to love. Young.

3. Skillful; dexterous.

Speak unto all that are wife-hearted, whom I have filled with the spirit of wisdom, that they may make Aaron's garments. Exodus.

moral wifeness. Spenser.

To WISH, v. n. [pirean, Saxon.]

1. To have strong desire; to long.

The sun heat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and wished in himself to die. Jonah

Full the year were playing holidays,
To sport would be as tiring as to work;
But when they told that they wish'd for more. Shakespeare.

They have more heart than could wish. Paine.

With longing wish'd from her seat,

And grace, that won who saw to wish her stay.
Rose, and went forth. Milton.

There are ships prepar'd by my command,
That shall convey you to the wish'd-for port. Addison.

That Noah or Janna understood navigation, may be very well supported by his image found upon the first Roman coins. One side was stamp'd with a Janus bifrons, and the other with a rostrum, or prow of a ship. This is as good an argument as an antiquary could wish for. Arbuthnot.

And much he wish'd, but durst not ask to part.
Parnel.

2. To be disposed or inclined.

Those potentates, who do not wish well to his affairs, have shown respect to his personal character. Addison.

As who shall say, I would thou wert the man. Shakespeare.

To WIT, v. n. [pirean, Saxon.] To know.

This word is now only used in the phrase
to wit, that is to say.

There is an officer, to wit, the sheriff of the shire,
whose office it is to walk up and down his bailiwick.
Spenser.

Yet are these feet, whose strengthless stay is numb,
Unable to support this lump of clay,
Swift-winged with desire to get a grave;
As willing I no other comfort have. Shakespeare.

WIT, n. f. [rgepit, Saxon; from pirean, to know.]

1. The powers of the mind; the mental faculties; the intellects. This is the original signification.

Who would let his wit to so foolish a bird?
Shakespeare.

The king your father was reputed for
A prince most prudent, of an excellent
And unmatch'd wit and judgment. Shakespeare.

Will puts in practice what the wit deviseth,
Will even acts, and not contemplates still;
And as from not the power of wisdom rieth,
All other virtues daughters are of will.

Will is the prince, and wit the counsellor
Which doth for common good in council sit;
And when wit is resolv'd, will lends her power
To execute what is advis'd by wit. Dantes.

For wit and power their last endeavours bend
To outline each other. Dryden.

2. Imagination; quickness of fancy.

They never met, it is a strength of wit between them. — Alas, in our last conflict, fourth his five wits went halting on, and now is the old man govern'd by one. Shakespeare.

I wad, shallow, half-brain'd brags make atheistic, and contempt of religion, the only badge and character of wit. South.

And though a ton in thy large bulk be writ,
Yet thou art but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.

If a lying most in the assemblage of idoms, and putting those together with quickness and variety, wherein can be found any resemblance or con-gruity, thereby to make up pleasant pictures in the fancy. Judgment, on the contrary, lies in separating carefully one from another ideas wherein can be found the least difference, thereby to avoid being misled by similitude. Locke.

Could any but a knowing prudent cause
Begin such motions, and assign such laws?
If the great mind had form'd a different frame,
Might not your wanton wit the system blame? Blackmore.

3. Sentiments produced by quickness of fancy, or by genius; the effect of wit.

All sorts of men take a pleasure to gird at me.
The brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends more to laughter than what I invent, and is invented on me.

I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wits is in other men. Shakespeare.

His works become the frippery of wit. B. Jonson.
The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they falsified the world. Spenser.

The definition of wit is only this, that it is a propriety of thoughts and words; or, in other terms, thoughts and words elegantly adapted to the subject. Dryden.

Let a lord once but own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens, and the style refines! Pope.

4. A man of fancy.
Intemperate wits will spare neither friend nor foe, and make themselves the common enemies of mankind. L'Estrange.

A poet, being too witty himself, could draw nothing but wits in a comedy: even his tools were infected with the disease of their author. Dryden.
To tell them would a hundred tongues require;
Or one vain wit's, that night a hundred tire. Pope.

5. A man of genius.
Hence 'tis a wit, the greatest word of fame,
Grows such a common name;
And wits by our creation they become,
Just as titular bishops made at Rome:

'Tis not a rule, 'tis not a jest
Admir'd with laughter at a feast,
Nor florid talk, which can that title gain;
The proofs of wit for ever must remain. Cowley.
Searching wits, of more mechanic parts,
Who grac'd their age with new-invented arts;
Those who to worth their bounty did extend,
And those who knew that bounty to commend. Dryden.

How vain that second life in others breath,
Th' effate which wits inherit after death!
Ease, health, and life for this they must resign;
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine!
The great man's curse without the gain endure;
Be envy'd, wretched; and be flatter'd, poor. Pope.
Nought but a genius can a genius fit;
A wit herself, Amelia weds a wit. Young.

6. Sense; judgment.
Strong was their plot,
Their practice close, their faith suspected not,
Their states far off, and they of wary wit. Daniel.

Come, leave the loathed stage,
And this more harmless age;
Where pride and impudence, in faction knit,
Usurp the chair of wit. Ben Jonson.
Though his youthful blood be fir'd with wine,
He wants not wit the danger to decline. Dryden.

7. Faculty of the mind.
If our wits run the wildgoose-chase, I have done;
For thou hast more of the wildgoose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakespeare.

8. [In the plural.] Soundness of understanding; intellect not crazed; sound mind.

I had a son,
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he fought my life;
The grief hath craz'd my wits. Shakespeare.
Are his wits safe? is he not light of brain? Shakespeare.

Sound sleep cometh of moderate eating; he iseth early, and his wits are with him, but the man of watching, and choler, and pangs of the rely, are with an untatuable man. Eccelesiasticus.
No man in his wits can make any doubt, whether there be such things as motion, and sensation, and continuity of bodies. Wilkins.

Wickedness is voluntary frenzy, and every sinner does more extravagant things than any man that is crazed, and out of his wits, only that he knows better what he does. Tillotson.
No man in his wits can seriously think that his own soul hath exist'd from all eternity. Bentley.
Contrivance; stratagem; power of expedients; invention; ingenuity.

How can it chide but bring the simple to their wits end? how can it abuse but vex and amaze them? Hooker.

I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brainford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, counterfeiting the action of an old woman, delivered me. Shakespeare.

Slights from his wit and subtlety proceed.

The neighbourhood were at their wits end, to consider what would be the issue. L'Estrange.

WITCH, n. f. [piece, Saxon.]

1. A woman given to unlaful arts.
Wife images have prescribed, that men may not rally believe the confessions of witches, nor the evidence against them. For the witches themselves are imaginative; and people are credulous, and ready to impute accidents to witchcraft. Bacon.
View the ruder wits, the conjurer by root, and has the not store of ignorance, and zeal of mischief? Holyday.

The night-hag comes to dance
With Lapland witches, while the lab'ring moon
Eclipses at their charms. Milton.
When I consider whether there are such persons as witches, my mind is divided: I believe in general that there is such a thing as witchcraft, but can give no credit to any particular instances of it. Spenser.

2. [from pie, Sax.] A winding sinuous bank.
Leave me those hills where harbrough is to free,
Nor holy bath, nor briar, nor winding witch. Spenser.

To WITCH, v. a. [from the noun.] To bewitch; to enchant.

Me ill befits, that in der-doing arms,
And honour's hut, my vowed days do spend,
Unto thy bounteous baits, and pleasing charms,
With which weak men thou witch'st, to utter! Spenser.

'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When church-yards yawn. Shakespeare.
I'll witch sweet ladies with my words and looks. Shakespeare.

WITCHCRAFT, n. f. [witch and craft.]

1. The practices of witches.
People are credulous, and ready to impute accidents and natural operations to witchcraft. Bacon.

2. Power more than natural.
Granta name, whose force he knew so well,
He quickly knew what witchcraft gave the blow. Saturn.
Have not some of learning and civility thought themselves wise, in thinking witchcraft rather a mistake than a crime? Holyday.

If you cannot
But his access to the king, never attempt
Any thing on him, for he hath a witchcraft.
Over the king's tongue. Shakespeare.
What subtle witchcraft man contrains
To change his pleasure into pains? Denham.

WITCHERY, n. f. [from witch.] Enchantment.

Another kind of petty witchery, it is not altogether decent, they call charming of hearts and buds. Raleigh.

Great Comus!
Deep skill'd in all his mother's witcheries. Milton.

WITCHCRACKER, n. f. [wit and cracker.]

A joker; one who breaks a jest.
A college of witchcrackers cannot float me out of my humour; dost thou think I care for a lecture or an epigram? Shakespeare.

WITCHCRAFT, n. f. [wit and craft.] Contrivance; invention. Obsolete.

He was no body that was hammer out of his name an invention of this witch, and picture accordingly. Camden.

WITE, v. a. [witan, Sax.] To blame;
to reproach.

The palmer 'gan most bitterly
Her to rebuke, for being loose and light;
Which not abiding, but more licentiously
Scoffing at him, that did her jolly wite,
She torn'd her boat about. Spenser.

WITE, n. f. [from the verb.] Blame;
reproach. Spenser.

WIT, preposit. [wit, Saxon.]

1. By; noting the cause.

Truth, th'd with iterat
As true as steel, as pliant to the moon. Shakespeare.
With thy powerful blast,
Heat apace, and cool as fast. Cure.
They adhered to John, their deprived bishop;
and could not be charmed with the flimsiness of any second bishop, during his life. Leigh.
With every stab her bleeding heart was torn,
With wounds much harder to be seen than born. Rowe.

2. Noting the means.
Rude and unpolished are all operations of the soul in their beginnings, before they are cultivated with art and study. Dryden.

3. Noting the instrument.
Bonas as through the lazy vapour flies,
And sweeps, with healthy wings, the rank polluted flakes. Rowe.
By persulations with large bellows, miners give motion to the air. Woodward.

4. On the side of; for: noting confederacy or favour.
Fear not, for I am with thee. Genesis.

5. In opposition to; in competition or contest.
I do contest
As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever 'gainst thy valour. Shakespeare.
He shall be with any irar in Spain. Dryden.

6. Noting comparison.
Can blazoning caruncles with her compare? Saunders.

7. In society: noting connexion.
God gave man a lion that should live for ever, although the body be decayed; and those who were good should be with him. Stillingfleet.
In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow,
Thou 'rt such a touchy, telly, pleading fellow;
Hast thou much wit, and much, and I'll be true to thee,
There is no living with thee, nor without thee. Tatler.

8. In company of.
At the instant that your messenger came, in loving visitation was with me a young doctor from Rome. Shakespeare.

9. In appendage: noting consequence or concomitance.
Men might know the persons who had a right to regal power, and with it to their obedience. Locke.

10. In mutual dealing.
I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following; but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. Shakespeare.

11. Noting confidence: as, I trust you with all my secrets; or, I trust all my secrets with you.

12. In partnership.
Though Jove himself no less content would be,
To part his throne and share his heaven with thee. Pope.

13. Noting connexion.
Pity your own, or pity our estate,
Nor twist our fortunes with your sinking fate. Dryden.

14. Immediately after.
With that she told me, that, though the spake of her father Cremes, she would hide no truth from me. Edwards.

With that, he crawled out of his nest,
Forth creeping on his castif hails and thighs. Fairy Queen.

In falling, both an equal fortune tried,
Would fortune for my lust so well provide!
With this he pointed to his face, and show'd
His hands and all his habit smear'd with blood. Dryden.

With that the god his darling phantom calls
And from his fast'ning this message falls. Gaith.

15. Among.
The duke of Buckingham the king used to employ with the first in his... Bacon.

ly, with the antients, a piece
Immortal powers the term of conference know,
But interest is her name with men below.
Dryden

5. Upon.

Such arguments had invincible force with those Immortal powers who became christians. Addy.

7. In content: noting parity of state.

See who on earth the now're glories lie,
With her they flourish'd, and with her they die.
Pope.

3. This preposition might perhaps be exemplified in many more relations, for its use is very frequent, and therefore very lay and various. With and by it is not always easy to distinguish, nor perhaps is any distinction always observed. With seems rather to denote an instrument, and by a cause: thus, he killed his enemy with a sword, but he died by an arrow. The arrow is considered rather as a cause, as there is no mention of an agent. If the agent be more remote, by is used; as,
the victim which he could not kill with his gun, he killed by poison: if these two prepositions be transposed, the sentence, though equally intelligible, will be less agreeable to the common modes of speech.

9. With, in composition, signifies opposition or privation; except withal.

A perfect natural good may be parted with,
upon a profitable expectation of a future moral good. Hobbes

WITHA'L. adv. [with and all.]

Along with the rest; likewise; at the same time.

Yet it must be withal considered, that the greatest part of the world are they which be tainted from perfection. Hobbes

How well supplied with noble counsellors!

How modest in exception, and withal

How terrible in constant resolution! Shakespeare

The one contains my picture, price;

If you chuse that, then I am yours withal. Shakespeare

This that prince did not transmit as a power, to make conquest, but as a return for his loss, and withal, to enable him to recover some part of his loss.

The river being wholly of fresh water, and to large withal, thick with the air.

God, when he gave me strength, to show withal
how slight the gift was, hung it in my hair.

Necessary men should be out of their homage before they attain to an actual use of this principle; and, withal, that they should be ready to exert and exercise their faculties. Watkins

I cannot, cannot bear; 'tis past, 'tis done;

Perish this impious, this detested son!

Perish his life, and perish I withal,
And let the house's hen and the hop'd kingdom
fall. Dryden

Christ had not only an infinite power to work miracles, but also an equal wisdom to know the just force and measure of every argument to persuade, and withal to look through and through all the dark corners of the soul of man, and to discern what prevails upon them, and what does not. South.

2. It is sometimes used by writers where we now use with, but I think improperly.

Time brings means to furnish him withal;
Let him but wait th' occasions as they fall. Daniel.

It is to know what withal delights us, and is pleased with withal have no do in order to our happiness. Tibbston

We owe to the withal the discovery of the most perfect rule of withal over the world was accounted to withal. Tibbston

To WITHDRAW. v. a. [with and draw; from pið, or piðen, Saxon, against, and draw.]

1. To take back; to bereave.

It is not possible they should observe the one,
who from the other withdraw unnecessarily obedience. Hooker.

Impossible it is that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very substance of God is infinite. Hooker

2. To call away; to make to retire.

Nathan is withdrawn, and a whole nation introduced, for a more general praise of Lyfies. Bacon.

To WITHDRAW. v. n. To retire; to retreat.

She from her husband soft withdrew. Milton.

At this excess of courage all amaz'd,
The foremost of his foes awhile withdrew.

With such respect in enter'd Rome they gaz'd,
Who on high chairs the godlike fathers saw.

Darius has passed the noon of life; but cannot withdraw from entertainments which are pardonable only before that stage of our being. Tatler.

WITHDRAWING-ROOM. n. f. [withdraw and room.] Room behind another room, for retirement.

For an ordinary gentleman, a hall, a great parlour, with a withdrawing-room, with a kitchen, but-teries, and other conveniences, is sufficient. Mortimer.

WITH. n. f.

1. A willow twig.

As with reel'd up a petition, that he might be hang'd in a with, and not a halter, because it had been to med with former rebels. Bacon.

Tell I, of cut-up others, did imply

A with, a tathome bag, with which his feet

I made together in a sure league meet. Chapman.

2. A band, properly a band of twigs.

[piðe signifies a band.]

These coats and withs will hold men's confidences, when force attends and twigs them. King Charles

Booker of use for ox yokes, hoops, levers, withs
for laggots. Mortimer.

To WITHER. v. n. [zēp, zēpōd, Saxon, dry, faded.]

1. To fade; to grow sapless; to dry up.

That which is of God's debt, to the utter-most of that ability which he hath given, that which is otherwise, let it wither even to the root from whence it hath sprung. Locke.

When I have pluck'd thy roses,
I cannot give it vital growth again;

It needs must wither. Shakespeare.

It shall wither in all the leaves of his spring.

The soul may flourish leave off to furnish them to love; and, like the vine, it withers and dies, if it has nothing to embrace. South.

2. To waste, or pine away.

Are there to many left of your own family, that you should desire wholly to reduce it, by suffering the last branch of it to wither away before its time? Temple.

3. To lose or want animal moisture.

Van men, with in the grave.

Now warm with, now with in the grave. Dryden.

To WITHER. v. a.

1. To make to fade.

The sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the dowers thereof
falleth. Jerome.

2. To make to shrink, decay, or wrinkle,

for want of animal moisture.

Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale her infinite variety. Shakespeare.

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine aim

Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up. Shakespeare.

What are they,

So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,

That look not like th' inhabitants of th' earth?
And yet are on it? Shakespeare.

Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change

To wither'd, weak, and grey. Milton.

In Spanish troops, like old men's children, be Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy;

No kindly flowers fall on our barren earth,
To hatch the tendons in a timely birth. Dryden.

WITHERBAND. n. f. A piece of iron which is laid under a fiddle, about four fingers above the horse's withers, to keep the two pieces of wood tight that form

the bow. Farrer's Dict.

WITHEREDNESS. n. f. [from withered.]

The state of being withered; marci-dity.

Water them as soon as fit, till they have recovered their witheredness. Mortimer.

WITHERS. n. f. Is the joining of the shoulder-bones at the bottom of the neck and mane, towards the upper part of the shoulder. Farrer's Dict.

Let the gall'd breast wince,

We are unwary in the withers. Shakespeare.

Rather than let your mind take long journeys, conceive that the fable may push the beast in his

withers. Swift.

WITHERWIND. The hurt expressed by withering sometimes is caused by a bite of a horse, or by a saddle being unfit, especially when the bows are too wide; for, when they are lo, they bruise

the flesh against the spines of the second and third vertebra of the back, which forms that prominence that rises above their shoulders. Farrer's Dict.

To WITHHOLD. v. a. [with and hold.]

Withhold, or withholden, pret. and part.

Spenser has, for the sake of rhyme, very licentiously written withhaul.

1. To refrain; to keep from action; to hold back.

That hand, which is no kind of imminent danger could cause us to withhold itself, to neither have any practices, so many, so bloody, following since, been ever able to make weary. Hooker.

With mine he is, or free or bound;

Withhold, O love, your power, your hasty hand

From knitting to go with him. Spenser.

The prince

Would fain have come with me to meet your grace;

And by his mother was perforce withheld. Shakespeare.

A great number of laws are for abusive words, or a box on the ear, or other trivial matters, which have no permanent ill effects, but, if our passions

may be withheld from stimulating them, pass off without making us the worse, or doing us any prejudice. Ketticwell.

Be careful to withhold

Your passions from the wretched and the bold;

Temper not the brave and ready to despair;

For, though your violence should leave them bare

Of gold and silver, swords and darts remain. Dryden.

Volition is an act of the mind, knowingly exerting that dominion it takes itself to have over any part of man, by employing it in, or withholding it from, any particular action. Locke.

To hinder; to obstruct.

What difficulties there are such as yet withhold

our ascent, till we be further and better furnished, hope no indifferent amongst them will be so refuse to hear. Newton.

3. To take away; to refuse.

Soon as Titan gain his head exalt,

And soon again as he his light withhaul,

Their wicked engines they against it bent. Spenser.

WITHHOLDEN. part. pass. of withhold.

The word keep back, sheweth that it was a thing formerly due unto God; for we cannot say that any thing is kept back, or withholden, that was not due before. Spelman.

WITHHOLDEN. n. f. [from withhold.] He who withholdeth.

WITHIN. prep. [pi'diŋnan, Saxon.]

1. In the inner part of.

Who then shall blame
His peſter'd ſenſes to recoil and ſtart,
When all that is within him does condemn Itſelf for being there? Shakſpeare.

By this means, not only many helpleſs perſons will be provided for, but a generation of men will be bred up, within ourſelves, not perverted by any other hopes. Sparr.

Till this be cured by religion, it is as impoſſible for a man to be happy, that is, pleaſed and contented within himſelf, as it is for a ſick man to be at eaſe. Tillotſon.

The river is afterwards wholly loſt within the waters of the lake, that one diſcovers nothing like a ſtream, till within about a quarter of a mile from Geneva. Adairſon.

2. In the compaſs of; not beyond; uſed both of place and time.

Next day we ſaw, within a kenning before us,
thick clouds, which put us in hope on hand. Bacon.
A beech-wood and a raſh-wood, which had all their leaves cut cloſe to the roots, within fix weeks had ſeen leaves. Bacon.

Moſt birds come to their growth within a ſhort night. Bacon.
With a ſome while the king had taken up ſuch living of his portion, that he reſolved to make him a maſterpiece. Watſon.

The invention of arts neceſſary or uſeful to human life, hath been within the knowledge of man.

As to infinite ſpace, a man can no more have a poſitive idea of the greater, than he has of the leſt ſpace. For in this latter, which is more within our comprehension, we are capable only of a comparative idea of ſmaltheſs, which will always be leſs than any one whereof we have the poſitive idea. Locke.

This, with the green hills and naked rocks
within the neighbourhood, makes the moſt agreeable contemtion. Tillotſon.

Boundleſs deſires within the line which birth and fortune have marked out, is an unſupportable duty.

3. Not reaching to any thing external.

Were every action concluded within itſelf, and drew no conſequence after it, we could undoubtedly never err in our choice of good. Locke.

4. Not longer ago than.

Within theſe five hours Haſtings had untainted, unſtain'd, free in liberty. Shakſpeare.

Within theſe three hours, I ſhall alone I thought in your Court walls,
And mad what work I pleas'd. Shakſpeare.

5. Into the reach of.

When on the brink the forming hour I met,
The deſperate ſavage ruſh'd a thouſand force,
And bore me headlong with him down the rock. Quincy.

6. In the reach of.

Secure of outward force, within himſelf
The dangers lie, yet lies within his power;
Againſt his will he can receive no harm. Milton.

I have ſuffer'd in your woe;
Nor ſhall be wanting aught within my power
For your relief. Dryden.

Thou Aurengzebe return a conqueror,
Both he and the air ſtill within my power. Dryden.

7. Into the heart or confidence of.

When by ſuch inſinuations they have once got within him, and are able to drive him on from one exceſs to another, no wonder if they reſolve to be guilty of all villainy. South.

8. Not exceeding.

Be inform'd how much your husband's revenue amounts to, and be ſo good a computer as to keep within it. Swift.

9. In the enclosure of.

No interwoven reeds a garland made,
To hide his brows within the vulgar ſhade;
But poplar wreaths around his temples ſpread. Addiſon.

Sedentary and within-door arts, and delicate manufactures, that require rather the finger than the arm, have a contrariety to a military diſpoſi-tion. Bacon.

WITHIN. adv.

1. In the inner parts; inwardly; internally.

This is yet the outward, faireſt ſide
Of our deſign. Within reſts more of fear,
More diſcord of bad event yet undeferr'd. Daniel.

Yet ſure, tho' the ſkin
Be cloſ'd without, the wound feſters within. Carew.

Death thou haſt ſeen
In his ſiſt ſhape on man; but many ſhapes
Of death, and many are the ways that lead
To his grim cave; all diſmal! yet to ſenſe
More terrible at th' entrance than within. Milton.

2. In the mind.

Language ſeems too low a thing to expreſs your excellence, and our ſouls are ſpeaking to much within, that they deſpise all foreign converſation,
Dryden.

The ſe as the guards from outward harms are ſent,
His from within, thy reaſon muſt preſent. Dryden.

WITHIN. adv. [within and ſide.] In the interior parts.

The forceps for extracting the ſtone is repreſented a little open, that the teeth may be better ſeen withinſide. Sharp.

WITHIN. prep. [pi'dutan, Saxon.]

To WITHSTAND. v. a. [with and ſtand.]

To gainſtand; to oppoſe; to reſiſt.

The violence of ſorrow is not at the firſt to be ſtriven withal; being, like a mighty beaſt, ſooner tamed with following, than overthrow by withſtanding. Seneca.

The wonderful zeal and fervour with which ye have withſtood the received orders of this church, was the ſiſt thing which cauſed me to enter into conſideration, whether every chriſtian man, fearing God, ſhould bound to join with you. Hooker.

It is our faculty that in many things we all do amifs, but a virtue that we could do amifs in nothing, and a testimony of that virtue, that when we pray, that what occasion of fin forever do offend, we may be ſtrengthened from above to withſtand
it. Hooker.

They ſoon ſet fail; nor now the ſates withſtand;

Which dwell in court.

which we say prove
That which is said to be true. Paraph.

The apple's outward form,
Delectable, the wit's vain beguile,
Till with a withen mouth and spattering noise
He takes the bitter morsel and rejects. Philips.

WITLING, n. f. [diminutive of wit.] A pretender to wit; a man of petty smartness.

You have taken off the senseless ridicule which for many years the wittings of the town have turned upon their fathers and mothers. Spectator.

Those half-learn'd wittings, vain in our life
As half-form'd infants on the banks of Nile. Pope.

A beau and witting perit'd in the throng;
One died in metaphor, and one in song. Pope.

WITNESS, n. f. [pretterre, Saxon.]

1. Testimony; attestation.

The devil can cite scripture for his purpose;
An evil soul producing holy witness
Is like a villain with a smiling cheek,
A goodly apple rotten at the heart. Shakespeare.

May we, with the warrant of womanhood, and the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with any further revenge? Shakespeare.

If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true. John.

Many bare false witness, but their witness agreed not. Milk.

Nor was long his witness unconfuted. Milton.

Ye moon and stars, bear witness to the truth!
His only crime, if friendship can offend,
Is too much love to his unhappy friend. Dryden.

Our senses bear witness to the truth of each other's report, concerning the existence of sensible things. Locke.

2. One who gives testimony.

The king's attorney against its incumbent. Deacy of Piety.

Nor need I speak my deeds, for these you see;
The sun and day are witnesses for me. Dryden.

3. With a WITNESS. Effectually; to a great degree, so as to leave some lasting mark or testimony behind. A low phrase.

Here was a blessing handed out with the first pairs of animals at their creation; and it had effect with a witness. Woodward.

Now gall is bitter with a witness;
And love is all delight and sweetness. Prior.

To WITNESS, v. a. [from the noun.] To attest; to tell with asseveration.

There ran a rumour
Of many worthy fellows that were out,
Which was to my belief witness'd the rather,
For that I saw the tyrant's power a-foot. Shakespeare.

Though by the father he were h'd to this,
He ne'er could witness any touch or kiss. Donne.

These be those discourses of God, whose effects show that live witness in themselves; the sensible in their sensible natures, the reasonable in their reasonable souls. Raleigh.

To WITNESS, v. n. To bear testimony.

The sea strive with the winds which should be londer, and the grounds of the ship, with a ghastly noise, to them that were in it witness'd that their run was the wager of the others caution. Sidney.

Mine eye doth his effigies witness
Most truly liv'd and living in your face. Shaksp.

Witness, you ever-burning lights above!
You elements that clip us round about!

some. Sidney.

The old hermit, that never saw pen and ink, very wittily said to a niece of king Gorbodach, that that is, is. Shakespeare.

Obstinate contemners of all helps and arts, such as, precluding on their natural parts, dare deride all diligence, and seem to mock at the terms when they understand not the things, think that way to get off wittily with their ignorance. Pen Jonson.

WITTINESS, n. f. [from witty.] The quality of being witty.

No less doth he witness in devising, his patience in waiting, his pastoral rudeness, and his moral wisdom. Spenser.

WITTINGLY, adv. [from witting, knowing; prean, Saxon, to weet or know.]

Knowingly; not ignorantly; with knowledge; by design.

Whatever we work as men, the same we do wittingly work and freely; neither are we, according to the manner of natural agents, any way so tied, but that it is in our power to leave things we do undone. Hooker.

Withhold revenge, 'tis not my fault,
Nor wittingly have I infring'd my vow. Shaksp.

During that desperate surge, every particular accident for broke the vessel's parts over. Kaestler.

He knoweth and wittingly brought evil into the world.

As are the swelling Adriatick seas,
I come to woo it wealthily in Padua. Shakespeare.

The ancient saying is no heresy.
Hanging and wiving goes by destiny. Shakespeare.

A shop of all qualities that man loves woman for;
besides that hook of wiving, fairness, which strikes
the eye. Shakespeare.

Design or chance makes others wive,
But nature did this match contrive. Wallor.

To WIVE, v. a.

1. To match to a wife.

She dying gave it me;
And bid me, when my fate would have me wive'd,
To give it her. Shakespeare.

2. To take for a wife.

If he have the condition of a saint, and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he should strive than wive me. Shakespeare.

WIVELY, adv. [from wive.] It were written more analogically wifely, that is, wife-like. Belonging to a wife.

Rashness could not abstain from praising Parthenia as the perfect picture of a womanly virtue, and wively truthfulness.

WIVES, n. f. The plural of wife.

A man of his learning should not so lightly have been carried away with old wives tales, from the providence of his own reason. Spenser.

WIZARD, n. f. [from wife.] A conjurer;
an inchanter; a he witch. It had probably at first a laudable meaning.

Patience, good lady; wizards know their times. Shakespeare.

He hearkens after prophecies and dreams,
And from the cross-row plucks the letter G;
And says, a wizard told him that by G
his wife should die. Shakespeare.

The wizard's daughter, hid in thy disguise,
By my return I know, and meet
thy love, ere my last speech could prevent
thy death's inhumanity, his wife's prayer. Shakespeare.

The wizard's daughter, hid in thy disguise,
By my return I know, and meet
thy love, ere my last speech could prevent
thy death's inhumanity, his wife's prayer. Shakespeare.

The wizard's daughter, hid in thy disguise,
By my return I know, and meet
thy love, ere my last speech could prevent
thy death's inhumanity, his wife's prayer. Shakespeare.

The wizard's daughter, hid in thy disguise,
By my return I know, and meet
thy love, ere my last speech could prevent
thy death's inhumanity, his wife's prayer. Shakespeare.

By my return I know, and meet
thy love, ere my last speech could prevent
thy death's inhumanity, his wife's prayer. Shakespeare.

The wizard's daughter, hid in thy disguise,
By my return I know, and meet
thy love, ere my last speech could prevent
thy death's inhumanity, his wife's prayer. Shakespeare.

The wizard's daughter, hid in thy disguise,
By my return I know, and meet
thy love, ere my last speech could prevent
thy death's inhumanity, his wife's prayer. Shakespeare.

The wizard's daughter, hid in thy disguise,
By my return I know, and meet
thy love, ere my last speech could prevent
thy death's inhumanity, his wife's prayer. Shakespeare.

The wizard's daughter, hid in thy disguise,
By my return I know, and meet
thy love, ere my last speech could prevent
thy death's inhumanity, his wife's prayer. Shakespeare.

The wizard's daughter, hid in thy disguise,
By my return I know, and meet
thy love, ere my last speech could prevent
thy death's inhumanity, his wife's prayer. Shakespeare.

The wizard's daughter, hid in thy disguise,
By my return I know, and meet
thy love, ere my last speech could prevent
thy death's inhumanity, his wife's prayer. Shakespeare.

The wizard's daughter, hid in thy disguise,
By my return I know, and meet
thy love, ere my last speech could prevent
thy death's inhumanity, his wife's prayer. Shakespeare.

The wizard's daughter, hid in thy disguise,
By my return I know, and meet
thy love, ere my last speech could prevent
thy death's inhumanity, his wife's prayer. Shakespeare.

The king is mad; how stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up and have ingenuous feeling
Of my huge sorrows! better I were distract;
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;
And woe, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakespeare.

So many miseries have crush'd my voice,
That my woe-wearied tongue is still. Shakespeare
Her rash hand in evil hour

Forth reaching to the fruit, Eve pluck'd, the cat:
Earth felt the wound; and nature from her seat
Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe
That all was lost. Milton.

O'er dreary wastes they weep each other's woe. Pope.

2. It is often used in denunciations, woe be;
or in exclamations of sorrow, wo is; uncertainly wo wurth; pu pun'd, Saxon.

All is but lip wisdom which wants experience: I saw, wo is we, do try what love can do. Sidney.

Wo is my heart;
That poor soldier, that so richly fought,
Whole rags shan'd gilded arms, whose naked breast Crept before shields of proof, cannot be found. Shakespeare.

Many of our princes, woe the while!
Lie drown'd and sink'd in mercenary blood. Shakespeare.

Happy are they which have been my friends;
and woe to my lord chief justice. Shakespeare.

How! ye, no worth the day
Who be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves. Ezekiel.

Wo is me for my hurt, my wound is grievous. Jeremiah.

He took and laid it by, and wept for woe. Chapman.

If God be such a being as I have described, woe to the world if it were without him: this would be a thousand times greater loss to mankind than the extinguishing of the sun. Tillotson.

Woe to the vanquish'd, woe!
Dryden.

3. A denunciation of calamity; a curse.
Can there be a woe or curse in all the stores of vengeance equal to the malignity of such a practice, of which one single instance could involve all mankind in one contusion? South.

4. Wo seems in phrases of denunciation or imprecation to be a substantive, and in exclamation an adjective; as particularly in the following lines, which seem improper and ungrammatical.

Woe are we, fir! you may not live to wear
All your true followers out. Shakespeare.

WOOD, n. f. [pab, Sax. glafum, Lat.] A plant cultivated for the dyes, who use it for the foundation of many colours. Miller.

At times of old, when British nymphs were known
To love no foreign fashions like their own;
When dress was modest, and fig-leaves the mode,
And quality put on no paint but woad. Garth.

WOEBEGONE, adj. [wo and begone.] Lost in wo; distracted in wo; overwhelmed with sorrow.

Such a man,
So dull, so dead in look, so woebegone,
Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night,
And would have told him how his Troy was burn'd;
But Priam found the fire, ere he his tongue. Shakespeare.

Who so woebegone
For Ochy, as the life of ancient Avalon? Dryden.

Tancred he saw his life's joy set at naught,
So woebegone was he with pain of love. Pope.

Woe. The obsolete participle passive from woe.

A braver choice of danteless spirits
Than now the English bottoms have made Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakespeare.

WO'FUL, adj. [wo and full.]

1. Sorrowful; afflicted; mourning.

The woful Gynecia, to whom rest was no ease, had left her loathed lodging, and gotten herself into the solitary places those defence were full of. Sidney.

How many woful widows left to low
To sad disgrace!
In a town, and never to be loos'd,
The woful captive kinsmen are inclos'd. Dryden.

2. Calamitous; afflictive.

Willful extravagance ends in woful want. Proverbs.

O woful day! O day of woe!
3. Wretched; paltry; sorry.

What woful fruit this madrigal would be,
In some flurr'd hackney-fommeteer, or me?
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens! how the style refines! Pope.

WO'FULLY, adv. [from woful.]

1. Sorrowfully; mournfully.

2. Wretchedly; in a sense of contempt.

He who would pass such a judgment upon his condition, as shall be confirmed at that great tribunal, from which there lies no appeal, will find himself wofully deceived, if he judges of his spiritual estate by any of these measures. South.

WO'FULNESS, n. f. [from woful.] Misery;
calamity.

WOLD, n. f. Wold, whether singly or jointly, in the names of places, signifies a plain open country; from the Saxon wold, a plain and a place without wood. Gilpin.

Wold and wold with the Saxons signified a taylor or governor; from whence herewold is a famous governor; ethewold a noble governor; herewald, and by derivation uadher, a general of an army. Gilpin.

WOLF, [pulp, Saxon; wolf, Dutch.]

1. A kind of wild dog that devours sheep; thence any thing ravenous or destructive.

Advance our waving colours on the walls,
Refined Orleans from the English wolves. Shakespeare.

No, rather I abjure all roofs, and choose
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl, Necessity's sharp pinch. Shakespeare.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou shouldst have said, O, porter, turn the key,
All craves else subscribe'd. Shakespeare.

2. An eating ulcer.

How dangerous it is in sensible things to use meta-phorical expressions, and what absurd conceits the vulgar will swallow in the literals, an example we have in our profession, who having called an eating ulcer by the name of wolf, common apprehension conceives a reality therein. Brown.

WO'LFDOG, n. f. [wolf and dog.]

I was not come into the world then. L'Estrange.
He wistfully brought evil into the world. More.
Christian fortitude consists in suffering, for the love of God, whatever hardships can befall in the world. Dryden.

5. A secular life.

Happy is the that from the world retires,
And carries with her what the world admires;
Thrice happy she, whose young thoughts fix above,
While the lovely does to heav'n make love:
I need not urge your promise, ere you find
An entrance here, to leave the world behind. Waller.

By the world, we sometimes understand the things of this world; the variety of pleasures and interests which steal away our affections from God. Sometimes we are to understand the men of the world, with whose solicitations we are so apt to comply. Rogers.

6. Publick life; the public.

Why dost thou draw me thus to th' world?
Bear me to prison. Shakespeare.
Hence banish'd, is banish'd from the world;
And world-exil'd is death. Shakespeare.

7. Business of life; trouble of life.

Here I'll set up my everlasting rest,
And shake the yoke of man's suspicious fears
From this world-wearied flesh. Shakespeare.

8. Great multitude.

You a world of curles undergo,
Being the agents, or busy second means. Shakespeare.
Nor doth this wood luck worlds of company;
For you in my respect are all the world. Shakespeare.
I leave to speak of a world of other matter,
Furnished by kings. Raleigh.

Garnments richly woven
And worlds of prize. Chapman.
In double sitis table hark: with him a world of men.

Most strong and full of valour went. Chapman.
What a world of contradictions would follow upon the contrary opinion, and what a world of confusion upon the contrary practice! Bishop Sanderson.

Just to romances are, for what else
Is in them all but love and battles?
O' th' first of these we have no great matter
To treat of, but a world o' th' latter. Hudibras.

It brought into this world a world of woe. Milton.
There were a world of paintings, and among the rest the picture of a lion. L'Estrange.

Manage draws a world of business on our hands,
Subjects us to law-suits, and loads us with domestick cares. Dryden.

From thy corporeal prison freed,
Soon hast thou reach'd the goal with mended pace;
A world of woes dispatch'd in little space. Dryden.
Why will you fight against in twain a passion,
And steel your heart to such a world of charms? Addison.

9. Mankind; a hyperbolical expression for many: all the world is a favourite phrase, in French, for many.

This hath bred high terms of separation between such and the rest of the world, whereby the one sort are named the brethren, the godly; the other, worldlings, time-servers, pleasers of men more than
of God. Hooker.

'Tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd.
Thus the world may see what 'tis to innovate! Dryden.

He was willing to declare to all the world, that,
as he had been brought up in that religion established in the church of England, he would maintain the same by unanswerable reasons. Clarendon.
To turn them over to the study of beauty and pleasure, and the whole world conspires to make them
thus something else. Law.

10. Course of life.

Persons of conscience will be afraid to begin the world unjustly. Clarissa.

11. Universal empire.

Rome was to sway the world. Milton.
This through the east just vengeance hurl'd,
Love lost poor Antony the world. Prior.

12. The manners of men; the practice of life.

Children should not know any wickedness. Old folks have discretion, and know the world. Shakespeare.
What, hast thou when sixty years have spread
Their grey experience o'er thy hoary head?
Is this the all observing age could gain?
Or hast thou known the world so long in vain? Dryden.

If knowledge of the world makes man perditionous,
May I but ever live in ignorance. Addison.
The owl might pass, if we could get her
To know the world a little better;
To know the world! a modern phrase
For vults, ombers, bulls, and plays. Swift.

13. Every thing that the world contains.
Had I know a thousand worlds, I would give them all for one year more, that I might present to God one year of such devotion and good works, as I never before to much as intended. Law.

14. A large tract of country; a wide compass of things.
'Tis I who love's Columbus am, 'tis I
That must new worlds in it descry. Cowley.

15. A collection of wonders; a wonder.
Obsolete.
The balls having recommended Barlaam, it was a world to see, how the court was changed upon him. Kueller.

16. Time. A sense originally Saxon; now only used in World without end.
17. In the world. In possibility.
All the precautions in the world were taken for the marriage of his younger brother. Addison.

18. For all the world. Exactly. A ludicrous sense, now little used.
He had a pair of horns like a bull, his feet cloven, as many eyes upon his body as my grey mare hath dapples, and for all the world to placed. Sidney.

19. Worldliness. n. f. [from worldly.]
Covetousness; addictions to gain.

20. Worldling. n. f. [from world.] A mortal set upon profit.
Base minded wretches! are your thoughts so deeply bimmed in the trade of ordinary worldlings, as for respect of gain to let so much time pass? Sid.

The one sort are named the brethren, the godly;
the other worldlings, time-servers, and pleasers of men more than pleasers of God. Hooker.
God of the world and worldlings,
Great Mammon! greatest god below the sky. Spenser.
For his weeping in the needful stream;
Poor dear, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
As worldlings do, giving thy fun of more
To that which had too much. Shakespeare.

That other on his friends his thoughts bestows;
The covetous worldling, in his anxious mind,
Thinks only for the wealth he left behind. Dryden.
If we consider the expectations of futurity, the worldling gives up the argument. Rogers.

21. Worldly. adj. [from world.]
1. Secular; relating to this life, in contra-distinction to the life to come.
He is divinely bent to meditation;
And in no worldly lusts would he be moved,
To draw him from his holy exercise. Shakespeare.
Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command? Shakespeare.

The fortitude of a christian consists in patience;
not in enterprises which the poets call heroic, and which are commonly the effects of interest, pride, and worldly honour. Dryden.
Compare the happiness of men and beasts no farther than it results from worldly advantages. Atterbury.

As to worldly affairs, which my friends thought so heavy upon me, they are most of them of our own making, and fall away as soon as we know ourselves. Low.

2. Bent upon this world; not attentive to a future state.
They'll practise how to live secure,
Worldly or dissolute, on that their lords
Shall leave them to enjoy. Milton.

3. Human; common; belonging to the world.
Many years it hath continued, standing by no other worldly man. Shakespeare.

Times and places are approved witnesses of worldly actions. Raleigh.

22. Worldly. adv. [from world.] With relation to the present life.

It is a token of a worldly wife man, who is contend in vain against the nature of times which is liveth. Shakespeare.

Subverting worldly strong and worldly wife
By simply meek. Milton.
This cannot be done, if my will be worldly or voluptuously disposed. South.
Since your mind is worldly bent,
Therefore of the two gifts in my dispose,
Think ere you speak, I grant you leave to choose. Dryden.

the earth.
Both the princes
Thy broken faith hath made a prey to worms. Shakespeare.

Help me into some house,
Or I shall turn! A plague o' both your houses!
They have made worms meat of me. Shakespeare.
Though worms devour me, though I turn to mould,
Yet in my teeth I shall his face behold:
I from my marble monument shall rise
Again intire, and see him with these eyes. Shakespeare.
At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
Infect or worm. Milton.

2. A poisonous serpent.
The mortal worm. Shakespeare.

3. Animal bred in the body.
Physicians observe these worms engendered within the body of man. Harvey.

4. The animal that spins silk; silk worm.
Thou owest the worm no silk, the sheep no wool. Shakespeare.

5. Grubs that gnaw wood and furniture.
'Tis no awkward clasp,
Pick'd from the worm-holes of long-vanish'd days,
Nor from the dust of old oblivion rak'd. Shakespeare.

6. Something tormenting.
The worm of conscience hath begnaw thy soul.
The chains of darkness, and th' undying worm. Shakespeare.

7. Any thing vermiculated, or turned round; any thing spiral.
The threads of screws, when bigger than can be made in iron-plates, are called worms. The length of a worm begins at the one end of the spiral, and end at the other; the length of the worm is contained between any two grooves on the spiral, the depth of the worm is cut into the diameter of the spiral, viz. the depth between the outside of the worm, and the bottom of the groove. Mason.

24. To worm. v. n. [from the noun.] To work slowly, secretly, and gradually.
When debates and treading jealousy
Did worm and work within you more and more,
Your colour faded. Herbert.

25. To worm. v. a.
1. To drive, by slow and secret means,

They find themselves wormed out of all power, by a new spawn of independents, sprung from your own bowels. Swift.

2. To deprive a dog of something, nobody knows what, under his tongue, which is said to prevent him, nobody knows why, from running mad.
Every one that keepeth a dog, should have him
wormed. Mortimer.

26. To worm. v. a. [from worm and eat.]
1. To worm.
For his worm, nobody knows what, under his tongue, which is said to prevent him, nobody knows why, from running mad. Shakespeare.

2. Old; worthless.

Worst. adj. [the superlative of bad, formed] from worfe; bad, worfe, worst.] Most bad; most ill.

It thou hadst not been born the worst of men,
Thou hadst been knave and flatterer. Shakespeare
The pain that any one actually feels is full of all other the worst, and it is with anguish they cry out.
Locke

Worst. n. f. The most calamitous or wicked state; the utmost height or degree of any thing ill.

Who is't that say I'm at the worst?
I'm worse than ever I was,
And worse I may be yet: the worst is not,
So long as we can fly, this is the worst. Shakespeare
That you may be armed against the worst in this unhappy time of affliction in our distressed country, I send you these considerations on the nature and immortality of the soul. Digby
Happy the man, and happy be above,
He who can call to-day his own.
He who seems within can lay,
To-morrow do thy worst, for I have had to-day
Shakespeare

Sir Roger gets into the frontiers of his church, before he beats about in search of a horse, on purpose to spare his own fields, where he is always sure of finding diversion when the worst comes to the worst. Spenser

To Worst. v. a. [from the adjective.] To defeat; to overthrow.

The case will be no worse than where two duel-lists enter the field, where the worst of party hath his sword given him again without further hurt.
Shakespeare

The bear was in a greater fight,
Beat down and worsted by the knight. Halliday
It is downright madness to contend where we are sure to be worsted. Shakespeare

The victorious Philistines were worsted by the captivated ark, which taught them to carry more than a conquering army. South
She could have brought the chariot again, when she saw her brother worsted in the duel. Shakespeare

Your honesty will take in good worth the offer of these my simple and mean labours. Hooker
What is worth in any thing,
But so much money as 'twill bring? Halliday
A common mercantile shall have the colour of gold exactly; and yet upon trial yield nothing at all but verd and green. Woodward

2. Excellence; virtue.

How can you him unworthy then decree,
In whose chief part your worths implanted be?
Sidney

Is there any man of worth and virtue, although not instructed in the school of Christ, that had not rather end the days of this transitory life as Cyrus, than to sink down with them of whom Elhu hath said, inemento mortemur? Hooker

Having from these sack'd all they had of worth,
And brought home that faith which you carried forth,
I thoroughly love. Donne

Her virtue, and the confidence of her worth,
That would be would. Milton

A nymph of your own train
Given us your character in such a strain,
As none but her, who in that court did dwell,
Could know such worth, or worth describe so well.
Wells

Detest'd worth, like beauty dilapidat'd,
To cover the loss of prime itself afraid. Young

3. Importance; valuable quality.

Peradventure those things, whereupon time was then well spent, have worth that lost their worth, and worth. Halliday
Take a man possessed with a strong desire of any thing, and the worth and excellency of that thing appears much greater than when that desire is quite extinguished. South

WORTH. adj.

1. Equal in price to; equal in value to.

Women will love her that is a woman,
More worth than any man, men that be is.
The rarest of all women. Shakespeare
You have not thought it worth your labour to enter a professed diffinitive of a philosophy, which the most part of Europe have detected,
as a mere waste of worth. Gould

As it is a worth worth that has come cold,
And worth is not to come, till we've it. Shakespeare
It is a while to consider how worth, he has turned the worth of his marionette, and made his worth and worth concerned even in what relate to the worth. Shakespeare

If you in worth produce no conviction, they are worth nothing to me. Bacon

2. Deserving of; either in a good or bad sense.

You to mind daughter found this in worth worth
The worth in which he is worth. Shakespeare
The worth appears to be a place worth the keeping, and capable to be made worth against a good army. Shakespeare

How we may retain worth; and, in my choice,
To let it be worth ambition, though in hell. Milton
Hath worth, I've, and worth thy fight behead.
Fills not among these trees, what glorious shape Comes this way moving. Milton

Whatever
Is worth of the love is worth then answer. Donne

This is his worth, his worth worth worth;
Such life as worth never felt till now. Shakespeare with a letter, but was discouraged for want of something that I could think worth sending fifteen hundred lines. Bacon

Many things are worth enquiry to one man, which are not to another. Watts

3. Equal in possessions to.

Dangerous rocks,
Which, touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all the spices on the stream,
Enoble the roaring waters with my silks,
And, in a word, but even now worth this,
And now worth nothing. Shakespeare

Although worth nothing, he shall be proffered the best endowed and most beautiful virgin of their land. Shakespeare
At Geneva are merchants reckoned worth twenty hundred thousand crowns. Shakespeare

WORTHY. adv. [from worthy.]

fluence upon us to engage us to walk worthy of our extra word, and to do nothing that is base. Bacon

2. Deservedly; according to merit.

They are betray'd,
While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules,
For loathing the sickness, worthy, since they God's charge did not reverence in themselves. Milton

You worthily succour your ancestors, but also your nation. Dryden

3. Justly; not without cause.

Christian men having, besides the common light of all men, to great help of heavenly direction from above, together with the lamps of bright examples as the church of God doth yield, it cannot but worthily seem reproachful for us to have both the one and the other. Hooker

The king is present; if it be known to him
That I gain say my deed, how may be wound,
And worthily, my fallhood! Shakespeare

A christian cannot lawfully hate any one, and yet I affirm that some may very worthily deserve to be hated; and, of all, the deceiver deserves it most.
South

WORTHINESS. n. f. [from worthy.]

1. Desert; merit.

The prayers which our Saviour made were, for his own worthiness, accepted; our God accepteth

a belief in Christ. Hooker

2. Excellence; dignity; virtue.

Determining never to marry but him whom she thought worthy of her, and that was one in whom all worthiness were harboured. Shakespeare

He that is at all times good, must hold his virtue to you, whole worthiness would fit it up where it wanted, rather than slack it where there is such abundance. Shakespeare

Who is here he hath a font, unless
It be and judge, and follow worthiness,
And by deeds prove it; he who doth not this,
May judge an inmate font, but is not his. Donne

What let my thoughts on worthiness was the worthiness and worthiness of the subject in it. Halliday

3. State of being worthy; quality of acquiring.

With chates. Shakespeare.

Lord, the house and family are thine,

Though some of them repave,

Turn out these wranglers which do file thy seat,

For where thou dwellest all is neat. Herbert.

You should be free in every answer, rather like well-bred gentlemen in polite conversation, than like angry and contentious wranglers. Watts.

The capacious turn of an habitual wrangler dedens the understanding, furs the temper, and hardens the heart. Beattie.

To WRAP. v. a. preterit and part. pass.

wrapped or wrapt. [hæppian, Saxon,

to turn; wræf, Danish.]

1. To roll together; to complicate.

Peter took the napkin that was about his head

wrapped together by itself. John.

This said, he took his mantle's foremost part,

He 'gan the same together fold and wrap. Faust.

2. To involve; to cover with something rolled or thrown round. It has often the particle up intensive.

Nilus opens wide

His arms and ample bosom to the tide,

And spreads his mantle o'er the winding coast,

In which he wraps his queen, and hides the flying boat. Dryden.

Wise poets, that wrap truth in tales,

Knew her themselves through all her veils Carew.

The sword made bright is wrapt up for the slaughter. Ezekiel.

Of midnight vapour, glide obscure. Milton.

Wrap candles up in paper. Swift.

3. To comprise; to contain.

Leontine's young wife, in whom all his happiness was wrapt up, died in a few days after the death of her daughter. Addison.

4. To WRAP UP. To involve totally.

Some dear cause

Will in concealment wrap me up awhile;

When I am known aright, you shall not grieve

Lending me this acquaintance. Shakespeare.

King John fled to Laleus, who was careful how to comfort him, wrapt up in so many calamities,

after the loss of his kingdom. Kneller.

Things reflected on, in gross and trausiently,

carry the shew of nothing but difficulty in them,

and are thought to be wrapped up in impenetrable obscurity. Locke.

5. [It is often corruptly written for rap or rapt, from rapio, Latin.] To snatch up miraculously.

Whatever things were discovered to St. Paul,

when he was wrapped up into the third heaven, all the description he makes is, that there are such things as eye hath not seen, ear heard, nor hath entered into the heart of man to conceive. Locke.

6. To transport; to put in ecstacy: for rapt.

Much more the reverent fire prepar'd to lay,

Wrapp'd with his joy, how the two armies lay. Cowley.

7. Perhaps the word wrap is properly so rap, though wrapped is now frequently used in this sense.

Wrapt up in silent fear he lies. Waller.

Wrapp'd in amice the matrons wildly do. Waller.

WRAPPER. n. f. [from wrap.]

1. One that wraps.

2. That in which any thing is wrapped.

My arms were prest to my side, and my legs closet together by so many wrappers, that I looked like an Egyptian mummy. Spectator.

WRATH. n. f. [pnas, Saxon; wrede,

Danish; wreed, cruel, Dutch.] Anger, fury; rage.

Thou dost the prayers of the righteous seed

Present before the majesty divine.

And his avenging wrath to clemency incline. Spenser.

With one fool's head I came to woo,

But I go away with two:

Sweet, adieu! I'll keep my oath,

Patience to bear my wrath. Shakespeare.

I fear, lest there be debates, envyings, wars,

fudles. Corinthians.

He hop'd not to escape, but thus

The pretent, fearing guilty what his wrath

Might suddenly inflict. Milton.

Achilles' wrath, to Greece the direful spring

Of woes unnumber'd, heavenly goddess! ung. Page.

WRATHFUL. adj. [wrath and full.] Angry;

furious; raging.

He cried, as raging fens are wont to roar,

When wat'ry storm his wrathful wreck doth threat. Spenser.

Fly from wrath:

Sad be the fights, and bitter fruits of war,

And thousand turies wait on a wrathful words. Spencer.

How now? your wrathful weapons drawn! Shakespeare.

The true evangelical zeal should abound more in the mild and good-natured affections, than the vehement and wrathful passions. Spencer.

WRATHFULLY. adv. [from wrathful.]

Furiously; passionately.

Gentle friends,

Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully. Shakespeare.

WRATHLESS. adj. [from wrath.] Free from anger.

Before his feet so steep and hoary lay,

Fearless and wrathless, while the y heard him play Waller.

To WREAK. v. a. old preterit and part.

pass. wroke and wroken, now wreaked.

It is likely that the word wrought, which is only used in the past tense, is originally the preterit of wreak. [præcan,

Sax. wrecken, Dutch; recken, German.]

1. To revenge.

In an ill hour thy foes thee hither sent,

Another's wrongs to wreak upon thyself. Spenser.

Hum all that while occasion did provoke

Against Pyrocles, and new matter train'd

Upon the old, him furring to be wroke

Of his late wrongs. Spenser.

Pale death our valiant leader hath oppress'd;

Come wreak his loss, whom bootless ye complain. Faustus.

You could pursue

The son of Perops then, and did the goddess stir

That villany to wreak the tyrant did to her. Dryden.

2. To execute any violent design. This is the sense in which it is now used.

On me let death wreak all his rage. Milton.

He left the dame,

Resolv'd to spare her life, and save her shame,

But that detested object to remove.

To wreak his vengeance, and to cure her love. Dryden.

Thine wrath shall drive him hence, a wandering exile.

To distant climes; then think what certain anguish

His rage may wreak on your unhappy orphan. Smith.

To wreck his ship on the desol'd prey. Pope.
3. It is corruptly written for reck, to heed; to care.

My mother is of churchly disposition,
And thus screaks to find the way to heav'n
By doing deeds of hospitality. Shakspeare

WRECK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Revenge; vengeance. Obsolete.
Fortune, mine avowed foe,
Her wrathful wrecks themselves do now allay. Spenser.

Join with the Goths, and with revengeful war
Take a wreck on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the traitor Saturnine. Shakspeare.
Some ill's behind, rude Ganes, for thee to bear;
That fear'd not to devour thy guests, and break
All laws of humanity; Jove lends thee one wreck. Chopman.

2. Passion; furious fit. Obsolete.
What and it
His furrows have to overwhelm his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his wrecks,
His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness? Shakspeare.
WREATHFUL. adj. [from wreath.] Revengeful; angry. Not in use.

Call the creatures,
Whose naked natures live in all the spite
Of wreathful heaven. Shakspeare.
She in Olympus' top
Must visit Vulcan for new arms, to serve her wreathful son. Chapman.

WREATHLESS. adj. [I know not whether this word be miswritten for reckless, careless; or comes from wreck, revenge, and means unrevengeful.]

So flies the wreathless shepherd from the wolf;
So first the harlot's neck doth yield his throat,
And next his throat unto the butcher's knife. Shakspeare

WREATH. n. f. [wreath, Saxon.]

1. Any thing curled or twisted.
The wreath of three was made a wreath of five to their three tributes of the two houses, were added the authorities parliamentary and papal. Bacon

Clouds began
To darken all the hill, and smoke to roll
In dusky wreaths of constant flames. Milton.
He of his tortuous train
Cur'd many a wanton wreath. Milton

Let altars smoke,
And richest gums, and spices, and incense roll
Their fragrant wreaths to heav'n. Smith.

2. A garland; a chaplet.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments. Shakspeare.

Dropp'd from his head, a wreath lay on the ground. Beaumont.

The boughs of Lotus, form'd into a wreath,
This monument thy maiden beauty's due,
High on a plane-tree shall be hung to view. Dryden.

When for thy head the garland I prepare,
A second wreath shall bind Amata's hair;
And when my choicest songs thy worth proclaim,
Alternate verse shall bless Amata's name. Prior.
To WREATH. v. a. preterit wreathed; part. pass. wreathed, wreathen. [from the noun.]

1. To curl; to twist; to convolve.
Long lay he Did never forget for her sake compile,
Nor ever laid his wreathed arms about
His loving bosom, to keep down his heart. Shakspeare

About his neck
A green and golden focke had wreath'd itself,
Who with her neck, mumble, in the air approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Calisto, it wreath'd itself,
And with intended gnaws did slip away. Shakspeare.
The beard of an oak is wreathed at the bottom and one smooth entire arm at the top; they take only the part wreathed, and cut off the other. Bacon

2. It is here used for to writhe.
Impatient of the wound,
He rolls and wreaths his burning body round;
Then headlong shoots beneath the dashing tide. Gay.

3. To interweave; to entwine one in another.
Two chains of pure gold, of wreathen work, shalt thou make them, and fasten the wreathen chains to the oaches. Exodus

As fakes breed in dunghills not singly, but in knots, so in such hateful hearts you shall ever see pride and ingratitude indivisibly wreath'd and twisted together. South

4. To encircle as a garland.
In the flowers that wreath the sparkling bowl Fell addsers life, and poisonous serpents rove. Prior.

5. To encircle as with a garland; to dress in a garland.
For thee she feeds her hair,
And with thy winding ivy wreathes her lance. Dryden.

The soldier, from successful camps returning,
With laurel wreath'd and rich with hostile spoil, Sovers the bull to Mars. Prior.

To WREATH. v. n. To be interwoven;
to be intertwined.
Here, where the labourer's hands have form'd
a bow'r
Of wreathing trees, in singing waste an hour. Dryden

WREATHY. adj. [from wreath.] Spiral; curled; twisted.

That which is preserved at St. Dennis, near Paris, hath wreathy spires, and cochlear turnings about, which agree with the description of an unicorn's horn in Adam. Brown.

WRECK. n. f. [wreck, Saxon, a miserable person; wrecke, Dutch, a ship
broken.]

1. Destruction by being driven on rocks or shallows at sea; destruction by sea.
Fair be ye here; but hard and obstinate,
As is a rock amidst the raging floods;
'Gainst which a ship, of favour desolate,
Doth under wreck both of herself and goods. Spenser.

Like those that see their wreck
Even on the rocks of death, and yet they strain,
That death may not thus idly find 'em attend
To their uncertain talk, but work to meet their end. Daniel.

Think not that flying fame reports my fate,
I present, I appear, and my own wreck relate. Dryden.

2. Disillusion by violence.
Not only Partridge,
In this communion, but the flaring cope
Had gone to wreck. Milton.

The soul shall flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt amidst the war of elements,
The wreck of matter, and the crash of worlds. Addison.

3. Ruin; destruction.
Whether he was Combin'd with Norway, or did line the rebel
With hidden help and vantage, or that with both
He labour'd in his country's wreck, I know not. Shakspeare.

4. It is misprinted here for wreck.
He cried wreck and seas are wont to roar,
When warring wrecks his wreathful wreck doth threaten. Spenser

5. The thing wrecked: as, the ship was considered as a wreck.
To WRECK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To destroy by nothing on rocks or sands.
Have the rocks many more such tempests where the bath wrecked been wrecked? Spenser.

A poet's thumb,
Wreck'd as he did come. Shakspeare.

The coral found growing upon wrecked ships and lost anchors, that are daily dragged up out of the sea, demonstrates that coral continues to be formed to this day. Woodward.

2. To ruin.
Weak and cawied, if they should conspire,
They wreck themselves, and he hath his desire. Daniel.

3. In the following passages it is ignorantly used for wreck, in its different senses of revenge and execute.
Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen. Shakspeare.

I faint! I die! the goddess cried:
O cruel, couldst thou find none other
To wreck thy spleen on, parasite?
Like Ness, thou hast slain thy mother. Prior.

To WRECK. v. n. To suffer wreck.
With number objects we must try
His constancy, with such as have more show
Of worth, of honour, glory, and popular praise,
Rocks whereon greatest men have often wreck'd. Milton.

WREN. n. f. [wrenna, Saxon; regulus, Latin.] A small bird.
The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. Shakspeare.

All ages have conceived that the wren is the least of birds; yet the discoverers of America have showed us one far less, the hum-bird, not much exceeding a beetle. Brown.

To WRENCH. v. a. [wringan, Saxon;
wringhen, Dutch.]

1. To pull by violence; to wrest; to force.
Wrench his sword from him. Shakspeare.
Oh torn!

How often dost thou with thy safe, thy habit,
If wrench we from tools, and tie the water bouls
To thy false seeming! Shakspeare.
Give me that matted and the wrenching iron. Shakspeare.

Cesar's army, wanting something, demanded a million or discharge, with no intention it should be granted; but thought by that means to wrench him to their other defence. Bacon.

Sing the Parthian, when transfar'd he lies,
Wrenching the Roman javelin from his thighs. Dryden.

Struggling to get loose, I broke the strings, and wrenched out the pegs that fasten'd my arm to the ground. Swift.

2. To sprain; to distort.
O most small fault,
How ugly didst thou in Coriolanus show!
Which, like an engine, wrenched my frame of nature
From the true place; drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. Shakspeare.

You wrenched your foot against a stone, and were forced to fly. Swift.

WRENCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A violent pull or twist.
2. A sprain.
Some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench, the whole leg thereby loses its strength. Locke.

3. Wrenches, in Chaucer, signifies means, deights, subtilities; which is, I believe,
the sense here.

He resolved to make his profit of this business of Prison, as a quarrel for war, and that of Naples as a wreck and quarrel for peace. Bacon.

To WREST. v. a. [wrestan, Saxon.]

1. To twist; to violence; to extort writings or force.
To wing this sentence, to wrest it from men's hands the knowledge of God's doctrine, is without all reason. Affham.

To what wretched state refer'st,
Better and here unborn? Why is life giv'n,
To be thus wrested from us? Milton.

Where you charged in prison, you were a wrestler: the rebels afterwards recovered strength, and wrested that victory from others that they had lost to you. Dryden.

WRITER. n. f. [from write.]

1. One who practises the art of writing.
2. An author.

All three were ruined by justice and sentence, as delinquents, and all three famous writers. Bacon Pecceable times are the best to live in, though not so proper for such materials for a writer. Addison.

Writers are often more influenced by a desire of fame, than a regard to the public good. Addison.

Would a writer know how to behave himself with relation to posterity, let him consider in old books what he finds that he is glad to know, and what omissions be most lamented. Swift

To WRITHE. v. a. [puddan, Saxon.]

1. To distort; to deform with distortion. It cannot be this weak and writhe thump Should strike such terror in his enemies.

Shakspere.

Hatefullest distelfish writhe'd their jaws

With foot and under is Milton.

Her mouth she writhe'd, her forehead taught to frown,

Her eyes to sparkle fires to love unknown,

Her fallow cheeks her envious mind did show,

And every feature spoke aloud the curstness of a fiend. Dryden.

2. To twist with violence.

Then Satan first knew pain,

And writhe'd him to and fro convuls'd. Milton.

Amid the plumed furies it took its course,

And in the spinal marrow sport its force;

The monster hiss'd aloud, and curl'd in vain,

And writhe'd his body to and fro with pain,

He bit the dust. Addison.

3. To writhe; to force by violence; to torture; to distort.

The reason which he yieldeth, sheweth the least part of his meaning to be that whereunto his words are writhe'd. Hooker

4. To twist.

Take an heifer which hath not been wrought with, and which hath not drawn in the yoke.

8. Worked; driven.

As infection from body to body is received many times by the body passive, yet is it by the good disposition thereof repulst and wrought out, before it be formed in a disease.

9. Actuated.

Vain Morat, by his own rashness wrought,

Too soon discover'd his ambitious thought;

Believ'd me his before I spoke him fair,

And pitch'd his head into the ready snare.

10. Manufactured.

It had been no less a breach of peace to have wrought any mine of his, than it is now a breach of peace to take a town of his in Guiana, and burn it.

11. Formed.

He that hath wrought us for the same thing, is God.

12. Excited by degrees; produced by degrees.

The spirit is wrought,

To dare things high, set up an end my thought.

The two friends had wrought themselves to such an habitual tenderness for the children under their direction, that each of them had the real passion of a father.

Advantage was taken of the sanguine temper which so many successes had wrought the nation up to.

Whatever littleness and vanity is to be observed in the minds of women, it is, like the cruelty of butchers, a temper that is wrought into them by that life which they are taught and accustomed to lead.

13. Guided; managed.

A ship by skilful steerer's hand wrought.

14. Agitated; disturbed.

We stay upon your leisure—

—Give me your favour; my dull brain was wrought

With things forgot.

WRY. The pret. and part. pass. of wring.

He first said to me; then my hand he wring.

No mortal was ever so much at ease, but his shoes wrung him somewhere.

The tender anguish nature shoots

Through the wrung bosom of the dying man.

WRY. adj. [from writhe.]

1. Crooked; deviating from the right direction.

Sometimes to her news of myself to tell

I go about, but then is all my best

Wry words, and flamm'ring, or else doltish dumb;

Say then, can this but of enchantment come? Siden.

2. Distorted.

It is but a kick with thy heels, and a wry mouth,

And Sir Roger will be with thee.

Instructive work! whose wry-mouth'd portraiture

Display'd the fates her confessors endure.

Cutting the wry neck is never to be prestid, but when the disorder is a contraction of the monstrous muscle

3. Wrung; perverted; wrested.

He mangles and puts a wry sense upon protestant writers.

To WRY. v. n. [from the adjective.] To be contorted and writhed; to deviate from the right direction.

These wry too much on the right hand, ascribing to the holy scripture such kind of perfection as it cannot have.

To WRY. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make to deviate; to distort.

To what pale are our minds brought, that from the right line of virtue are wryed to these crooked shifts?

WRYNECK. n. f. [torquilla, Lat.] A bird.

X.

X Is a letter which, though found in Saxon words, begins no word in the English language.

Y.

Y

Y At the beginning of words, is commonly taken, though I think erroneously, for a consonant; at the end, and when it follows a consonant, is a vowel, and has the sound of i. It is used at the end of words, and whenever two is would come together, and in words derived from the Greek, to express the u. Y was much used by the Saxons, whence

y is found for i in the old English writers. Y is, in old English, sometimes prefixed as an increasing syllable to preterites and passive participles of verbs. It seems borrowed from ge, the Saxon augmentum of the preterit. It is sometimes put before present tenses, but I think erroneously.

YACHT. n. f. [a Dutch word.] A small ship for carrying passengers.

YAWN. n. f. [gawn, Saxon.]

1. Enclosed ground adjoining to a house.

One of the lions leaped down into the neighbour's yard, where, nothing regarding the crowing of the cocks, he eat them up.

Xanthus one day sent Ajax into the yard, and bade him look well about him.

His wanton kids, with budding horns prepar'd,

Fight harmless battles in his homely yard.

2. [gepb, Saxon.] A measure of three feet.

A peer, a counsellor, and a judge, are not to be measured by the common yard, but by the pole of special grace. Flavor

The arms spread cross in a straight line, and measured from one end of the long finger on one hand to that of the other, made a measure equal to the stature, and is named a fathom. Half of that, viz. from the end of the long finger of either arm, so spread, to the middle of the breast, is with us called a yard. Holles

An aqueduct of a Gothick structure, that conveys water from mount St Francis to Spoleto, from the foundation of the lowest arch to the top, is two hundred and thirty yards. Addison

3. The supports of the fairs.

A breeze from shore began to blow.

The sailors ship their oars, and cease to row.

Then both their yards astrip, and all their sails

Let fall to court the wind. Dryden

YARDWAND. n. f. [yard and wand.] A measure of a yard.

All the revolutions in nature can give it nothing more than different degrees of dimention. What necessity has thinking with such attributes? no more than there is between a syllogism and a yardwand. Collier

YARE. adj. [geappe, Saxon.] Ready; dexterous; eager.

Yare, yare, good Iros, quick.—Methinks I hear

Anthony call. Shakespeare

I do desire to learn, sir; and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your turn, you shall find me yare. Shakespeare

YARELY. adv. [from yare.] Dexterously; skilfully.

The silken tackles

Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands,

That yarely frame the office. Shakespeare

YARN. n. f. [geapu, Saxon.] Spun wool; woollen thread.

You would be another Penelope; yet they say, all the yarn she spun in Ulysses's absence did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Shakespeare

The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together, our virtues would be proud, if our faults whipt them not; and our crimes would despair, if they were not cherished by our virtues. Shakespeare

Yarn is a commodity very proper to this country, which of all others ought to be most encouraged. Temple

It may be useful for the reeling of yarn. Watkins

The fates but only spun the coarser clue,

The finest of the wool is left for you.

Spare me but one small portion of the twine,

And let the fillets cut below your line:

The rest among the rubbish may they sweep.

Or add it to the yarn of some old miser's heap. Dryden

To YARR. v. n. [from the found; hurrio, Lat.] To growl or snarl like a dog. Amfworth

YARROW. n. f. [mullifolium, Latin.] A plant.

YAWL. n. f. A little vessel belonging to a ship, for convenience of passing to and from it.

To YAWN. v. n. [geonan, Saxon.]

1. To gape; to oculate; to have the mouth opened involuntarily by fumes, as in sleepiness.

The sleepy justice, with his curly hum,

Delivering o'er to execution

The lazy yawning drone. Shakespeare

In yawning, the inner parchment of the ear is extended. When a yawn cometh, he cannot hear so well. Bacon

At length shook off himself, and ask'd the dame,

And asking yawn'd, for what intent she came? Dryden

To whom the yawning pilot, fast asleep,

Me didst thou bid to trust the treacherous deep? Dryden

2. To open wide.

The gashes,

That bloodily did yawn upon his face. Shakespeare

'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When churchyards yawn. Shakespeare

Now will I clam up this thy yawning mouth,
For allowing up the treasure of the realm. Shakespeare

He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd,
Like vomit from his yawning entrails pour'd. Sandys

Hell at last
Yawning receiv'd them whole, and on them clos'd. Milton

The sword pierc'd his tender sides;
Down fell the beauteous youth; the yawning wound

Gush'd out a purple stream. Dryden

High the rear'd her arm, and with her sceptre thrust

The yawning chaff: from its disparted height

Adown the mount the gushing torrent ran. Prior

3. To expels desire by yawning.

The chiefest thing at which lay-reformers yawn, is, that the clergy may, through conformity in condition, be poor as the apostles were. In which one circumstance if they imagine to great perfection, they must think that church which hath such its reformers, a church in that respect most happy. Hocher

YAWN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Ofeitation.

There, Parol, the mark'd thee there,
Stretch'd on the rack of a too stily chair;

And heard thy exclaiming upon coxets

The pains and penalties of idleness. Pope

2. Gape; hiatus.

Hence to the borders of the marsh they go,

That mingles with the baleful fens below;

And sometimes with a mighty main, his land,

Opens a dismal passage to the dead;

Who, pale with fear, the rending earth survey,

And flatter at the sudden flash of day. Addison

YAWNING. adj. [from yawn.] Sleepy; slumbering.

Ere to black Hecate's summons

The shroud-born beetle, with his drowsy hums,

Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done

A deed of dreadful note. Shakespeare

YCLAD. part. for clad. Clothed.

Her sight did ravish, but her grace in speech,

Her words yclad with wisdom's majesty,

Make me from wond'ring fall to weeping joys. Shakespeare

YCLE'PED. [the participle passive of clepe, to call; clepan, Saxon; with the increasing particle y, which was used in the old English, in the preterits and participles, from the Saxon ge.] Called; termed; named.

But come, thou goddess fair and free,

In heav'n yclep'd Euphrosyne,

And by men heart-aching mirth. Milton

YDRA'D. The old preterit of To dread.

Spenser

YE. The nominative plural of thou.

Ye are they which justify yourselves. Luke

YEA. adv. [ea, or gea, Saxon; ja, Danish, German, and Dutch.]

1. Yes. A particle of affirmation; meaning, it is so, or, is it so?

Yea, hush God said, ye shall not eat of every tree in the garden? Genesis

Let your conversation be yea, yea; nay, nay.

Why do disputes us wrangling thus the day?

Whilst one says only yea, and t'other nay. Denham

2. A particle by which the sense is intended or enforced: not only so, but more than so.

I am weary; yea, my memory is tir'd. Shakespeare

A rascally, yea forsooth knave, to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security. Shakespeare

From thence Philippine are brought costly spices, yea, and gold too. Abbot

All the promises of God are yea, and amen;

that is, are verified, which is the substance of yea and confirmed, which is meant by amen, into a immutability. Hammon

They durst abide

Jehovah thund'ring out of Sion, thron'd

Between the cherubim; yea, often plac'd

Within his sanctuary itself their shrines. Milton

Notwithstanding this great proximity of man himself, yea, and notwithstanding the observation made in all ages, we still remain ignorant of many things concerning ourselves. Hai

To YEAD, or YEDE. v. n. preterit yod.

[This word seems to have been corrupted from geob, the Saxon preterit of gan.] To go; to march. Obsolete.

They wander at will, and slay at pleasure,

And to their toils yeade at their own leisure. Spenser

Then had the knight this lady yede aloof,

And to an hall herself withdrew aside,

From whence she might behold that battle's proof

And eke be safe from danger far detery'd. Spenser

Yet for the yode thierent hall aghest,

And kiddy the door sparred after her taff. Spenser

That same mighty man of God,

That blond red billows like a wall'd front,

On either side dispar'd with his rod,

Till that his army dry-foot through them yod. Spenser

To YEAN. v. n. [eanian, Saxon.] To bring young.

This I scarcely drag along,

Who yawning on the rocks has left her young. Dryden

Ewes yean the polled lamb with the least ounce

Motion. Mortimer

YEANLING. n. f. [from yean.] The young of sheep.

All the yawlings which were streak'd and pie

Should fall as Jacob's line. Shakespeare

YEAR. n. f. [geap, Saxon.]

1. If one by the word year mean two months of thirty days each, i. e. the hundred and sixty days; another into a solar year of three hundred sixty days; and a third mean a lunar year, twelve lunar months, i. e. three hundred fifty-four days, there will be a great variation and error in their account things, unless they are well apprized

each other's meaning. Wat

See the annals, how they run:

How many make the hour full compleat,

How many hours bring about the day,

How many days will finish up the year,

How many years a mortal man may live. Shakespeare

With the year

Seasons return, but not to me returns

Day, or the sweet approach of even or morn. Mil

Though we suppose but the addition of one for every thousand years, yet long before that there should have been a greater number than could be found in the earth. Hak

The doctor, upon occasion, calculating his pences on himself, found them to be set above pound in the year.

Opacorous creatures have eggs enough at conceived in them, to serve them for many laying, allowing such a proportion for every

as will serve for one or two incubations.

He accepted a curacy of thirty pounds a year.

2. It is often used plurally, without a ral termination.

I fight not once in forty year. Shakespeare

3. In the plural, old age.

Some mumble-news,

That smiles his cheek in years, and knows the

tr To make my lady laugh when she's dispos'd,

Told our intents. Shakespeare

There died also Cælia, mother to king Ed

iv. being of extreme years, and who had three princes of her body crown'd, and murdered. E

Y O U

You are two opposite women to each other,
 Southern and I feel.

As given in our table,  $C_{\text{p}} = 1.00$  and  $C_{\text{v}} = 1.50$ .

YOUNG. n. f. [from young]. The offspring of animals collectively.
 The hedge sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
 That it had its head bit off by its young. Shaksp.
 So many days my eyes have been with young;
 Sam'ny weeks ere the poor fools will young. Shaksp.
 The crows discov'rd their callow young. Milton.
 The reason why birds are oviparous, and lay eggs, but do not bring forth their young alive, is because there are but few plenty. More.
 Not to her young; for their unequal line
 Was heros smoke, half human, half divine,
 Their earthly mold obnoxious was to fate,
 In immortal part allu'd immortal fate. Dryden.
 Those infants, for whose young nature hath not made provision of sufficient maintenance, do themselves gather and live up in fowls for them. Ray.
YOUNG. adj. [from young]. Somewhat
 young.
 She left her second room to a very young of young-ish man. Waller.
YOUNGLING. n. f. [from young; young- ling, Sax.]. Any creature in the first part of life.
 More dear unto their God than younglings to their dam. King Queen.
 Youngling, thou canst not love so dear as I.
 - GUY. Heard, thy love doth freeze. Shakspere.
 When we perceive that bats have teeth, it is not unreason able to infer, they suck their younglings with milk. Brown.
 Encourag'd thus, she brought her younglings forth. Dryden.
 The hatchling beast the two Pyncheon bred,
 Saatch'd from his dam, and the tame youngling fed. Dryden.

YOUNGLY. adj. [from young].
 1. Early in life.
 Say we read lectures to you,
 How youngly he began to serve his country,
 How long continued, and what stock he sprung of. Shakspere.

2. Ignorantly; weakly.
YOUNGSTER. n. f. [from young]. A YOUNKER. } young person in contempt.

What, will you make a youngster of me? Shall I not take mine ease in mine inn, but I shall go have my pocket picked. Shakspere.
 See how the morning opens her golden gates,
 And takes her farewell of the glorious sun:
 How well resembles it the prime of youth,
 Trimm'd like a youngster prancing to his love. Shaksp.
 While Ulysses slept there, and Cleopatra
 The other romancers, he abroad would fly. Chapman.
 Fame tells, by age I have receiv'd grown,
 That Phoebus gave his chance to his son,

And while the sunne is from the path declines,
 Achilles, the braggart, sought the signs,
 Proud of his charge, he gave the fiery horse.
 - And young Achilles, in his course. Creech.
 The young man, at a time and place
 Which was his doom with and ten.
 From the city, all twelve o'clock
 Came the young man, looking at Locke. Prior.
YOUTH. n. f. [from young]. Youth.

The manifold use in youth now left no mark,
 As the way went to youth and summer days. Spenser.

YOUR. pronoun. [open, Saxon].
 1. Belonging to you. It is used properly when we speak to more than one, and ceremoniously and customarily when to only one.
 Either your unparalleled mistress is dead, or she's outwiz'd by a trifle. Shakspere.
 Inquire your danger to our ignorance;
 The bravest men are subject most to chance. Dryd.
 Ye dauntless Dardans hear,
 Think on the strength which once your fathers bore. Pope.

2. Your is used in an indeterminate sense.
 Every true man's apparel fits your thief: if it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough. If it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough; to every true man's apparel fits your thief. Shakspere.
 There is a great affinity between coms and poetry, and your medallist and critic are much nearer related than the world imagine. Addison.
 A disagreement between these seldom happens,
 but among your antiquaries and schoolmen. Venton.

3. Yours is used when the substantive goes before or is understood: as, this is your look, this book is yours.
 I pray for this man and for his bug,
 Whole heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
 And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakspere.
 That done, our day of marriage shall be yours.
 One feast, one house, one mutual happiness. Shaksp.
 This kiss, if it durst speak,
 Would stretch thy spirits up into the air.
 Conceive and fare thee well. Shakspere.
 - Yours in the ranks of death.
 He is forsworn, it e'er those eyes of yours
 Behold another day break in the east. Shakspere.
 While the sword thus monerchly centres,
 'Tis manag'd by an abler hand than yours. Dryden.
 My wealth, my city, and myself are yours. Dryd.
 It is my employment to revive the old of past ages to the present, as it is yours to transmit the young of the present to the future. Pope.

YOURSELF. n. f. [your and self].
 1. You, even you; ye, not others.
 It stand, as you yourself tell do,
 Within the eye of honour; be assur'd,
 My party, my person, my extremest means,
 Lie all unlock'd to your occasions. Shakspere.
 O heaven!
 If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
 Allow obedience, if yourselves are old,
 Make it your cause. Shakspere.
 2. In the oblique cases it has the sense of reciprocation, or reference to the same subject mentioned before. as, you love only yourself; you have betrayed yourselves by your rapine. Shakspere.
 Whenever you are more intent upon improving your persons than upon perfecting of your souls, you are much more beside yourselves than in that further have a faced coat than a healthful body. Gay.

3. It is sometimes reciprocal in the adminative.
 Be but yourselves. Pope.
YOUTH. n. f. [young, Saxon].
 1. The part of life succeeding to childhood and adolescence; the time from fourteen to twenty-eight.
 But could youth last, and love still breed,
 Had joys no date, and age no need,

YOUTH. Then these delights my mind might move,
 To live with thee, and be thy love. Relolph.
 His flarry hair imbricled flow'd him prime
 In manhood, where youth ended. Milton.
 The solidity, quantity, and strength of the aliment, is to be proportioned to the labour or quantity of muscular motion, which in youth is greater than any other age. Arbutnot.
 2. A young man.
 Sward's son,
 And many through youths even now,
 Protect their last of manhood. Shakspere.
 It thus were seen,
 The happiest youth viewing his progress through,
 What perils past, what crosses to come,
 Would shut the book and sit him down and die. Shakspere.

O'er the lofty gate his art embold'
 Andiege's death, and offerings to his ghost;
 Sev'n youths from Athens yearly sent, to meet
 The late appointed by revengeful Crete. Dryden.
 The pious chief
 A hundred youths from all his train elects,
 And to the Latin court their course directs. Dryd.

3. Young men. Collectively.
 As it is fit to read the best authors to youth first,
 so let them be of the upmost and clearest, as Livy
 before Sallust, Sidney before Dome. Ben Jonson.
 About him exercis'd heroic games
 Th' unarmed youth of heav'n. Milton.
 The graces put not more exactly on
 Th' attire of Venus, when the ball she won,
 Than that young beauty by thy care is dress'd,
 When all your youth preter her to the rest. Waller.
YOUTHFUL. adj. [youth and full].

1. Young.
 Our army is dispers'd already:
 Like youthful flocks any old they took their course,
 East, west, north, south. Shakspere.
 There, in a heap of slain, among the rest,
 Two youthful knights they found beneath a load oppress'd
 Of slaughter'd foes. Dryden.

2. Suitable to the first part of life.
 Here be all the pleasures
 That fancy can begot on youthful thoughts,
 When the fresh blood grows lively, and returns
 Back as the April buds in primrose season. Milton.
 In his years were seen
 A youthful vigor and autumnal green. Dryden.
 The nymph survey's him, and beholds the grace
 Of charming features, and a youthful face. Pope.

3. Vigorous, as in youth.
 How is a good christian animated by a stedfast belief of an exalting enjoyment of perfect felicity, such as, after millions of millions of ages, is still youthful and flourishing, and proving as at the first; no wrinkles in the face, no grey hairs on the head of eternity. Bacon.
YOUTHFULLY. adv. [from youthful]. In a youthful manner.
YOUTHLY. adj. [from youth]. Young;
 early in life. Obsolete.
 True be thy words, and worthy of thy praise,
 That warlike feats doth lighten glory,
 Theren have I spent all my youthly days,
 And many battles fought, and many trays. Spenser.

YOUTHY. adj. [from youth]. Young;
 youthful. A bad word.
 The tumbler had not genius to turn my age, as indeed I am an o't maid, into railery, for affecting a youthier turn than is consistent with my time of day. Spectator.
YRIGHT. part. [y and right, from pitch].
 Fixed.
 That same wicked wight
 His dwelling has low in an hollow cave,
 Far underneath a craggy clut upright,
 Dark, doleful, dreary, like a greedy grave. Spenser.

YUCK. n. f. [jucken, Dutch.] Itch.
YULE. n. f. [jeol, yeol, yehul, Saxon].
 The time of Christmas.
YEX. n. f. [jeox, Saxon; sometimes pronounced yer]. The hiccough.

Z E A

Z is found in the Saxon alphabets set down by grammarians, but is read in no word originally Teutonick: its sound is uniformly that of a hard s. No word of English original begins with z.

ZAFFRE. } n. f.
ZAFFIR. }

powder the calx of cobalt fine, and mix it with three times its weight of powdered flints, this being wetted with common water, concretes into a mass call zaffre, which from its hardness has been mistaken for a native mineral. Hill

Cobalt being dissolved, the flowers are of a blue colour; then German mineralists call zaffir. Woodward.

The artificers in glass tinge their glass blue with that dark mineral zaphra. Boyle.

ZANZI. n. f. [Probably of zanzi, the construction of Giovanni: from fanna, a feast, according to Shant.] One employed to raise laughter by his pictures, actions, and speeches; a merry Andrew; a buffoon.

Some a crystal, some a pleaser, some a slight zany, some a humbler, some a trencher knight, some a Dick, Shakespeare

Tell our intents before
Then write that I may follow, and so be Thy echo, thy debtor, thy foil thy zany,
I shall be thought, it may be like this. I hope,
All the world's his, though I be thy ape. Dante
Oh, great restorer of the good old stage,
Preacher at once, and zany, of thy age. Pope.

ZARNICH. n. f. A substance in which ornament is found, it approaches to the nature of ornament, but without its lustre and foliated texture. The common kinds of zarnich are green and yellow. Hill.

ZEAL. n. f. [ζῆλος; zelus, Lat.] Passionate ardour for any person or cause.

In this patient age, wherein zeal hath drawn d'clary and skill, meekness will not now suffer any man to move, whatsoever he shall hear reproved by himself. Hooker.

If I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you: but it is no matter, this poor fellow doth better, this doth inter the zeal I had to see him. Shakespeare

O Cromwell, Cromwell!
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
Thy'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies. Shakespeare.

The bare fervor and zeal is told in commendation for much other pity, many the most eager contenders. Hammond.

Among the seraphims
Abel, than whom none with more zeal ador'd
The Deity, and divine commands obey'd,
Stood up, and in a flame of zeal severe,
The current of his fury thus oppos'd. Milton

Had zeal anciently armed itself against sovereignty, we had never heard of a calendar of saints. Hobbes.

We must look our prayers be with zeal and candour: it is not enough that we so far attend them, as barely to know what it is we say, but we must put forth all the affection and devotion of our souls. Duty of Man.

Zeal, the blind conductor of the will. Dryden.

Z E A

See with such a zeal the cause embrac'd,
As women, where they will, are all in haste,
The father, mother, and the kin beside,
Were overcome by the fury of the tide. Dryden.
The princes applaud with a furious joy,
And the king leav'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy. Dryden

Seriousness and zeal in religion is natural to the English. Tillotson

Good men often blench the reputation of their piety by overacting some things in their religion; by an indiseet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned. Tillotson.

True zeal seems not to be any one single affection of the soul, but rather a strong mixture of many holy affections, rather a gracious constitution of the whole mind, than any one particular grace, swaying a devout heart, and filling it with all pious intentions; all not only uncounterfeit, but most fervent. Spratt.

When the sins of a nation have provoked God to forsake it, he suffers those to concur in the most pernicious counsels for enslaving conscience, who pretend to the greatest zeal for the liberty of it. Stillingfleet.

This religion has discovered to his majesty, who have espoused his interests with zeal or indifference. Addison.

A form of flattery and a zeal for truth. Pope.

There is nothing nobler in a clergyman but burning zeal for the salvation of souls, nor any thing more in his profession, but idleness and worldly spirit. Law.

ZEALOT. n. f. [zeleot, Fr. ζῆλωτης.] One passionately ardent in any cause. Generally used in disparage.

But now, whereas these zealots complain of us for partaking with the Roman church in things lawful and good, they themselves comply with the same in articles and actions which are of no good quality. White.

The fury of zealots, intestine bitterness and dissension, were the greatest occasion of the destruction of Jerusalem. King Charles.

Are not these men too often the greatest zealots, who are most notoriously ignorant? true zeal should always begin with true knowledge, and thence proceed to an unswerving passion, for what it once knows to be worthy of such passion. Spratt.

No wonder that so many of these deluded zealots have been engaged in a cause which they at last abhorred, and have wanted or acted for the sake of an enterprise, that might have ended in the extinction of the protestant religion. Addison.

ZEALOUS. adj. [from zeal.] Ardently passionate in any cause.

Our hearts are right with God, and our intentions pious, if we set our temporal affairs with a desire no greater than our necessity, and in actions of religion we be zealous, active, and operative, so far as prudence will permit. Taylor.

This day, at the hour of noon, came to my sphere
A spirit, such as he seem'd, to know
More of the Almighty's works. Milton.

We should be not only devout towards God, but zealous towards men; endeavouring by all prudent means to recover them out of those snares of the devil, whereby they are taken captive. Deacon of Paty.

It is not at all good to be zealous against any person, but only against their crimes. It is better to be zealous for things than for persons; but then it should be only for good things. A rule that does certainly exclude all manner of zeal for all things, all manner of zeal for little things. Spratt.

Z E U

Being instructed only in the general, and zealous in the main design, and as finite beings not admitted into the secrets of government, the last resorts of providence, or capable of discovering the final purposes of God, they must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducing to those ends in which alone they can be one each other. Trudeau.

I can, thus loved himself, he may be zealous in the salvation of souls. Law.

ZEALOUSLY. adv. [from zealous.] With passionate ardour.

Thy care is lost, and zealously attends,
To fill thy odorous lamp with deeds of light,
And hope that reaps not thine. Milton.

To enter into a party as into an order of friars, with a resigned obedience to superiors, is very unbecomable with the civil and religious liberties we so zealously assert. Smyth.

ZEALOUSNESS. n. f. [from zealous.] The quality of being zealous.

ZECHIN. n. f. [from Zecha, a place in Venice, where the mint is settled for coinage.] A gold coin worth about nine shillings sterling.

ZELOARY. n. f. [zelouaire, Fr.] A spicy plant, somewhat like ginger in its leaves, but of a sweet scent.

ZED. n. f. The name of the letter z. Thou who dost zed, thou uncessantly letter. Stallgrave.

ZE'ATH. n. f. [Arabic.] The point over head opposite to the nadir.

Fond men! it we believe that men do live under the zeath of both hemispheres.

Though more come the more admittance to give,
Why bear we not the like faith of our souls? Dante.

These zeath are denoted by the motion of the sun, when that approaches nearest our zenith, or vertical point, we call it summer. Blount.

ZE'PHYR. } n. f. [zephyrus, Lat.] The Ze'phyrus. } west wind; and, poetically, any calm soft wind.

They are as gentle
As zephyrs blowing below the violet. Shakespeare.

Zephyr you shall see a youth with a merry countenance, holding in his hand a fan with wings displayed, as about to sing. Peucham.

Fourth roll the leviant and the potent winds,
Eurus and Zephyr. Milton
Mild as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes. Milton

ZEST. n. f.

1. The peel of an orange squeezed into wine.

2. A relish; a taste added.

Almighty vanity! to thee they owe
Their zest of pleasure, and their balm of woe. Young.

To zest. v. a. To heighten by an additional relish.

ZETHEUS. adj. [from ζῆτις.] Proceeding by inquiry.

ZEUGMA. n. f. [from ζεύγω.] A figure in grammar when a verb agreeing with divers nouns, or an adjective with divers substantives, is referred to one expressly, and to the other by supplement; as, hust overcame flame, boldness fear, and weakness reason.

to be raised; also a low square member serving to support a column instead of a pedestal, base, or plinth. Dict.

ZODIACK, n. s. [zodiacus, Fr. zodiaque, It. zodiaco, the living creatures, the figures of which are painted on it in globes.]

1. The track of the sun through the twelve signs; a great circle of the sphere, containing the twelve signs.

The golden sun salutes the morn,
And having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallopeth zodiac in his gilt ring coach. Shaksp.

Years he number'd scarce thirteen,
When fate turn'd cruel:

Yet three ill'd zodiacs had been
The sage's jewel. Ben Jonson.

It exceeds even their absurdity to suppose the zodiac and planets to be efficient of, and antecedent to, themselves, or to exert any influences before they were in being. Bentley.

Here in a whirl, that cast a dazzling light,
Sat sat in thought the mighty Sengyrite;
His sacred head a radiant zodiac crown'd,
And various animals his sides furround. Pope.

2. It is used by Milton for a girdle.

By his side,
As in a glitt'ring zodiac, hung the sword
Bataar's dire dread; and in his hand the spear. Milton.

ZONE, n. s. [zonē; zona, Latin.]

1. A girdle. The middle part Girt like a flury zone his waist, and round

The magick dathy milking zone is pall,
But Sahibury's garter than for ever last. Cromwell.
Scarce could the goddess from her nymphs be known.

But by the crescent and the golden zone. Pope.
2. A division of the earth.

The whole surface of the earth is divided into five zones: the first is contained between the two tropicks; and is called the torrid zone. There are two temperate zones, and two frigid zones. The northern temperate zone is terminated by the tropick of Cancer and the arctic polar circle: the southern temperate zone is contained between the tropick of Capricorn and the polar circle: the frigid zones are circumscribed by the polar circles, and the poles are in their centers.

True love is still the same; the torrid zone.
And those more frigid ones,

It must not know:
For love grown cold or hot,
Is lost or friendship, not

The thing we show:
For that a woman would die,
Held down or up too high:

Then think I love more than I can express,
And would love more, could I but love thee less. Suckling.

And as five zones th' aetherial regions bound,
Five correspondent are to earth assigned:
The sun, with rays directly darning down,
Fires all beneath, and fries the middle zone. Dryd.

3. Circuit; circumference.

Scarce the sun
Hath finish'd half his journey, and scarce begins
His orb half in the great zone of heaven. Milton.

ZOOGRAPHER, n. s. [zōō and γράφω.]
